ELLIOTT SAYS MORGAN CAME TO OFFER AID

New Haven Head Declares He and Banker Did Not Form Plans.

HIS WORD TO NEW ENGLAND.

J. P. Morgan of the house of Morgan, in New York, conferred yesterday in Boston with President Howard Elliott of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad.

The conference was held at the Hotel Bellevue. It lasted several hours. Mr. Morgan arrived unheralded. He arrived after dark Friday. He had departed on the 3 o'clock train yesterday afternoon before his visit became public property.

Last night President Elliott gave out the following statement regarding the conference:

The object of Mr. Morgan's visit to Mr. Elliott was to confer about the general business, financial and railroad situations in New England and to offer any aid that he could give towards solving the complicated railroad situation.

INTERESTED IN WELFARE.

The firm of J. P. Morgan Company some time ago cancelled the so-called "fiscal agency agreement" with the Boston & Maine and the New Haven roads, and now Mr. Morgan has resigned from the New Haven board.

He is, however, deeply interested in the welfare of New England and of the Boston & Maine and the New Haven roads, and, while no longer officially connected in any way with the properties, or having any voice in the management, he stands ready and willing to do all that he or his firm can properly do to help out, financially or otherwise.

When asked if he had any New Year's message or greeting to extend to the New England public as head of the New Haven Railroad, President Elliott said:

I feel that the year 1914 should produce better results for New England and her railroads than did the year 1912.

There are most difficult problems to be solved and obstacles to be overcome, but I have faith that they will be solved and overcome. However, the results that all desire, namely, better living conditions, better business, better railroads, better service to the public, better returns to the unfortunate holders of railroad securities—can only be obtained by all working together—if all will bear and forbear, and will have patience and courage.

PRESS CAN HELP.

General business and the railroads must go hand-in-hand. Neither can succeed at the expense of the other, and the press can do much to help by encouraging a helpful spirit of co-operation, and, while criticising errors, give encouragement to the earnest efforts that are being made to better the whole situation.

It is slow work, but when a man has been very sick it takes time and nourishment for him to get well. This is true of the railroad situation of New England. Time is needed and nourishment in the shape of higher rates, and the greatest care and economy on the part of the management in big as well as little things.

The conditions can be made better, and will be made better if all will help just a little.

President Elliott was shown clippings from the afternoon newspapers to the effect that passenger service was to be reduced to the extent of 8,000 miles a week on the Boston & Maine after January 11, and another announcing a 2 per cent. cut in the New Haven shops.

CUTS FOR ECONOMY.

He replied:

This is merely done in compliance with the obvious policy to reduce expenses wherever and whenever the opportunity is afforded. Expenses simply have to be reduced. It is like running a household. When economy is necessary bills have to be cut. In the case of a railroad it must be done as wisely as possible and with all possible regard for the convenience of the public.

Asked about the proposition to divorce the Boston & Maine system from the New Haven road, Mr. Elliott said:

I am to confer with the authorities in Washington about that matter on Tuesday.

The father of the girl is a millionaire several times over, and is interested in the Willard Hotel of Washington and the Jefferson Hotel here.

"Our honeymoon is over, and I am going to try to help the doctor in his work," said the bride.

"I will be in the laboratory with him tomorrow morning and at work," she said. "I know that I am going to love you." The latter expression was intended for the entire American people.

There isn't much to say," added Dr. Carrel, "excepting you might refer to our wedding as a bacteriological romance.

J. P. Morgan's Dover House to Be Sold

Famous Estate Largest London Suburban Property.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—Dover House, at Roehampton, the magnificent suburban estate of the late J. Pierpont Morgan, has been ordered sold by the executors of the Morgan estate. The property comprises the largest suburban property near London and is noted for its extensive, well kept grounds.

The house is of low, rakish style and built along the early Stuart lines. Mr. Morgan seldom occupied the house, staying at Prince Gate usually when he was in London, but he always had the grounds kept up so that it appeared that the house was occupied.

DAUGHTER WEDS AT BEDSIDE OF DYING MOTHER

Five-Day Law Set Aside So That Maternal Blessing May Be Given.

COUPLE KEEP DEATH WATCH

HAVERHILL, Jan. 3. — The five-day marriage law was set aside here today so that Mrs. Bertha Dearborn of No. 22 Currier avenue might see her daughter, Viola, married to Bertram Griffin before the mother died.

Mrs. Dearborn, fatally stricken with diabetes, was told by her physician that death was but a few hours away.

The dying woman smiled and closed her eyes for a moment. Then she called her husband and daughter to her bedside. To the latter she made as her last request that her marriage with Bertram Griffin, which has been arranged for sometime, be solemnized while the mother was yet able to give the two young people her blessing.

JUDGE GIVES CONSENT.

Miss Dearborn hurried to the home of her betrothed, to whom she told her mother's dying wish.

Mr. Griffin started at once for the City Hall to get the marriage license, but Assistant City Clerk Quimby told him, under the law, the marriage could not be for five days.

But when Mr. Quimby heard the facts of the pressing request, he advised Mr. Griffin to tell the facts to Judge John J. Winn of the District Court. The Judge gave his consent and Griffin was soon back at the Dearborn home where the Rev. Nicholas Van der Eyl of Centre Congregational Church was waiting at the bedside.

KEEP DEATH WATCH.

The ceremony was over in a few minutes. As the minister pronounced the couple man and wife, the rapidly sinking mother, who had been again unconscious, opened her eyes and whispered her blessing to the wedded pair.

Then began, not a honeymoon, but a watch by the deathbed for Bertram Griffin and his bride.

Senators Endorse Build-a-Ship Move

Enthusiastic Meeting Is Held in Ford Hall.

Letters from Senators and Congressmen throughout New England were read last night at an enthusiastic meeting of the Build-a-Ship-in-Boston Commission in Ford Hall, indorsing the movement to build a ship at the local navy yard.

The sentiment of the meeting was decidedly optimistic, most of those present believing that the authorities at Washington could not but be impressed with the local yard's bid of $1,100,000 to build a supply ship, as against the next lowest bid of $1,350,000 by Newport News. Edward C. Baldwin presided.

$125,000 in Radium Fails to Save Busch

BUFFALO, N. Y., Jan. 3.—After a fight with death that was hopeless almost from the start, Dr. Frederick C. Busch, of the State Cancer Laboratory in this city, died a victim of cancer in that institution this afternoon. Everything that science could do was brought into play to save his life. Six weeks ago he submitted to an operation under the direction of Dr. Howard A. Kelly, in which $25,000 worth of radium was used, but even radium failed in this case.

$10 TO $7 ON KENNY

Little Curley Money in Sight

BETTING IS SLOW

If you believe in betting—

Bets are placed at $100 to $75; at $100 to $70, and some at $100 to $65.

One bet of $1,000 even money, however, was made in a South End haberdasher's.

Betting has been slow, owing to nomination contests. Monday it will open in earnest. Thus far the largest recorded bet at odds was $200 to $140 on Kenny. One offer of $500 to $350 on Kenny went begging.

His Father a Laborer in Employ of the City of Boston.

Editor AMERICAN:

I have read statements by Candidate Thomas J. Kenny and his friends that he is the son of an immigrant who became a Boston city laborer and that he would naturally be the last man to give city laborers anything but a square deal. Can you tell me if that statement about his descent is true?

(Signed) A CITY LABORER.

Thomas J. Kenny was born in Boston, the son of Irish immigrant parents. His father was a laborer in the employ of the city of Boston.

"What would happen if I should decide to shoot myself?" asked Ellis as he took the revolver. Haseltine thought he was joking and was dumbfounded when Ellis calmly pointed the revolver at his breast and pulled the trigger. He then lit a cigarette. At the Hale Hospital the surgeons say he cannot live.

CURLEY'S RECORD IS ASSAILED BY KENNY

Citizens' Candidate for Mayor Challenges Opponent to Explain His Inactivity on Matters Vital to Boston's Welfare.

Mayor Fitzgerald Applauds Nominee at Big Rally in Faneuil Hall—Large Audience Roused to Enthusiasm and Cheering.

THERE was "pep" in plenty in the Kenny rallies last night, when the popular candidate brought the battle over into Curley territory by charging the Roxbury Congressman with amazing inactivity.

At Faneuil Hall Mayor Fitzgerald made his appearance for the first time in the campaign. The crowd gave the Mayor his usual reception. Mr. Fitzgerald did not go to the platform. He heard Mr. Kenny's speech, applauded the president of the Council liberally, and held a reception.

Councilor Kenny declared to his and enthusiastic audiences at Bloomfield Hall and in Faneuil Hall, that Ward 17 owes its proposed municipal building not to James M. Curley but to Councilor Walter Ballantyne, the Kenny campaign manager.

And then Mr. Kenny went on to charge Mr. Curley with being asleep at the Congressional switch on subjects as vital to Boston as:

A new postoffice.

A forty-foot channel.

The appraisers' store.

A regional bank.

Massachusetts member for the Federal Reserve Board.

Extension of the Navy Yard.

CURLEY'S "INACTIVITY."

Cheered by two big audiences, Mr. Kenny demanded from Mr. Curley an explanation of his inactivity on these vital subjects. He intimated that when Mr. Curley answers these questions there will be others waiting.

Mr. Kenny also told his hearers last night, by contrast, something about his own part in recent public improvements. Mr. Kenny has been a member of the new, or smaller, City Council since its inception four Newport Hears That Society Leader Is to Be Bride of Filipino Missionary.

NEWPORT, R. I., Jan. 3.—Society friends of Mrs. Catherine Spencer, the wealthy widow of Lorillard Spencer, who recently started for the Philippines to uplift the fierce natives on the island of Jolo, were the source today of a remarkable and interesting rumor that the beautiful widow is to marry the Right Reverend Charles H. Brent, Episcopal missionary bishop to the Philippines, popularly known as the "Beggar Bishop," from his fearless way of demanding contributions from society.

Last Summer, when Bishop Brent was preaching Philippine missions to Newport's smart set, there were reports that Mrs. Spencer would wed again, but no name was mentioned. When the society world was startled a month ago at the announcement by Mrs. Spencer that she was to risk her life among the bolomen of Jolo (or Sulu) people wondered at the inspiration which could draw a cultured and petted society leader on such an extraordinary and dangerous mission.

Now there is discreet chatter to the effect that the eloquent and masterful Bishop Brent, who holds such remarkable sway in our inland possessions has won the heart of Mrs. Spencer.

ON WAY EAST NOW.

Mrs. Spencer is now on her way to the Philippines, via England and Singapore. She expects to arrive at Jolo the last of this month.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—Sylvia Pankhurst is again in jail. She was arrested by plain clothes men in South Hackney while walking from her secret residence to another house. She was in company with another woman. Both were taken completely by surprise but began to fight as soon as the police placed hands on them.

They called lustily for the assistance of the passersby, but the police commandeered a covered van, and handling the captives in droves to the Hackney police station. During the ride to the station house the women never ceased to call for help. Subsequently they were conveyed to Holloway.

CARDINAL O'CONNELL TO SUCCEED RAMPOLLA IS REPORT

According to News from Rome to the American, Cardinal May Be Archpriest of St. Peter's, If He So Desires

Warmest Expressions of Approval Heard in Eternal City Following Story of Honors for Head of Local Archdiocese

By CAMILLO CIANFARRA.
(Special Cable and Wireless to the Boston American.)

ROME, Jan. 3.—According to those high in the confidences of church circles in the Eternal City, William Cardinal O'Connell, Archbishop of Boston, will intimately succeed the late Cardinal Rampolla as archpriest of St. Peter's.

Incidentally, the rumor of honors in store for the loyal American prelate is received with the expression of warmest approval here.

Regarding the possible call to St. Peter's, the impression prevails in Catholic circles that the Boston Cardinal can have the post if he so chooses, and thus take a prominent place among the curia or "court" Cardinals. Catholic circles are also inclined to believe that the future holds great honors for His Eminence.

According to time honored tradition, the office of archpriest of the greatest temple in Christendom is always reserved for the papal secretary of state. On the day following the election of a new Pope, he leaves the Sistine chancery and takes his place among the administration Cardinals, and according to this theory the office would eventually go to Cardinal Merry Del Val.

The fact that Cardinal O'Connell's name has been mentioned means, very likely, that Cardinal Merry Del Val has declined the offer, expressing thereby his old and intimate friend O'Connell to be called to Rome as custodian of the great Basilica.

SCHOLAR AND EXECUTIVE.

Local students of church politics also seem inclined to believe, whether the offer has been accepted or declined, that there is more behind Cardinal Merry Del Val's action than appears on the surface. Since the so-called Milan "social week" adjourned, both the religious and lay press of Italy have continued the debate opened by Archbishop of Ubaldi's speech on a possible solution of the Roman question as applied to the Quirinal.

Some papers even declared the question will have to be ultimately solved by a Pope free from political bias—one born in a country not belonging to any of the two groups of European alliances. Now, it is argued, the only Cardinal possessing to the highest degree the qualifications necessary to solve such a great question is the Archbishop of Boston.

Besides a thorough knowledge of local conditions acquired during his many years in Rome, both as a student and as rector of the American College in Rome, Cardinal O'Connell is also regarded as a scholar and a man possessed of almost unparalleled executive power. It is pointed out now that he has distinguished himself in all the offices he has ever held. First as bishop of Portland, Me., Cardinal O'Connell attracted the Pope's attention, and this resulted in promotion at the first opportunity.

His work in Boston and the inter-

NEW HONOR REPORTED FOR BOSTON CARDINAL

ce he takes in Roman affairs earned for him the red hat at the Consistory of 1911. Should he return to Rome it will likely take him further. But will Cardinal O'Connell quit Boston? This is the question asked on every side in Vatican circles.

Should this appointment of the New England Cardinal to so high an office be accepted by him it will raise the already highly distinguished American prelate to the status of a world figure at the very centre of Catholicity.

Looking the whole church over, in every country, there is no other dignitary who transcends him in natural fitness for a so exalted a choice as that of successor to the great Rampolla.

Cardinal O'Connell embodies within himself a combination of gifts rare in the equipment of any one individual. A churchman of life-long training, both in America and in Europe; skilled pre-eminently in diplomacy—as was recognized by his choice for a most important mission to the court of Japan; an orator of power and eloquence; a master of several languages; thoroughly conversant in every detail with the affairs of the church all over the world, a knowledge gained not by books alone but by frequent and observant travel as well, meeting all sorts and conditions of men, in his own communion and outside its pale; an organizer and leader of men, a smoother away of difficulties and obstacles, which to those of smaller mind would seem mountainous—all this endowment when grouped in a single individual make of him material for the highest office and the greatest responsibility in any system of organized government, ecclesiastical or civil.

COMPOSER OF MUSIC.

Added to the major endowments of his intellectuality, the Cardinal is at home in the domain of sacred verse and music as is proved by the tuneful, devotional productions recently from his pen, which are now included among the best in modern music of the church.

That he is no mean judge of the arts, in stone or in marble or on the bookshelf, savants who have met and talked with him on matters affecting their individual fields of work most willingly attest.

As archpriest of St. Peter's, Cardinal Rampolla, who was Leo XIIIth's great secretary of state, occupied a position of unusual influence, socially as well as in the administration of the church. The office is unique in many of its accompanying features. The Cardinal archpriest occupies an official residence within the Vatican grounds. Here, on certain evenings every week, a formal reception is held, which is regarded of such importance and dignity that invitations are sought for it by the very cream of the highest Catholic society of the world.

So much for the position now vacant by the death of Cardinal Rampolla and of the generally agreed acceptance of the name of Cardinal O'Connell as his successor.

The question may not be settled for months. It is believed nothing will be done until the late Spring, when Cardinal O'Connell is expected to come again to Rome. The decision will rest entirely with the American Cardinal himself. The success of his administration of the affairs of the Boston diocese, which, under him in five years has become recognized as one of the most wisely governed and best organized in the Catholic universe, may lead him to feel that his future work still lies in his native land, rather than in Italy, even the most exalted office to which he might be called from abroad.

NEW DIOCESES PROBABLE.

Should the Cardinal decide that duty calls him to official life and residence in Rome, the Archdiocese of the church in New England would be given new diocesan boundaries, and it is reported that at least two new bishoprics would be created, the cathedral of one to be in the city of Worcester, capital of Central Massachusetts, and the other in Lowell, the birthplace of Cardinal O'Connell.

Suffrage Hikers Delayed by Storm

Fall Behind Schedule in Face of Snow and Icy Wind.

CORNWALL ON THE HUDSON, N. Y., Jan. 3.—Suffrage hikers reached Cornwall at dusk this evening. They had expected to reach Newburg by 5 o'clock, but the long hike starting from Jordan Point at 7.40 a. m. had exhausted them and caused them to fall far behind the schedule. Snow fell along the line of march all day, and walking was difficult at most places. Stops were made at Iona Island, Highland Falls and West Point.

The climb over Crow's Nest and Storm King, in the face of the driving snow and cold wind, left the party in such a tired-out condition that they were glad to accept the invitation extended by Mrs. Mary A. Sherwood to rest at her home when they reached Cornwall.

The party expects to reach Kingston Monday evening.

Former President John J. Attridge presided at the Faneuil Hall rally. Mr. Attridge made a tremendous hit by reading the editorial in yesterday's AMERICAN calling upon Mayor Kenny the Right Man for Mayor." Other speakers were Councillor Walter L. Collins—a toast have been noted by this time that Councillor Kenny has the unanimous support of his associates in the Council—and Councillor James A. ("Jerry") Watson.

CURLEY SHOUTER IN GALLERY.

Others on the platform were former Congressman Joseph F. O'Connell, Hon. Guy A. Ham, John P. Leahy, Esq., E. Mark Sullivan, Esq., Hon. Alfred Lee and Senator "Tom" Joyce.

Curley adherents in one of the galleries made an attempt while Councillor Watson was speaking to steal the thunder of Curley. The police on duty in the hall sent a hurry call for reinforcements. One constable was ordered from the meeting. The police escorted him to the door.

The first interruption came from a Roxbury man identified by some as Joseph A. Simpson, a one-armed Curley adherent, said to be in the employ of the government at Washington.

The one-armed man arose in his place to ask the privilege of asking a question. Councillor Watson said he would answer any question put to him that was "pertinent to the business of the evening." Whereupon the Roxbury employe of the government at Washington wanted to know if Watson, at City Hall a few days ago, didn't urge him to come to Kenny," and didn't promise that the one-armed man's job at Washington would be "all right."

CHEERED AS "NEXT MAYOR."

"The geneleman is a liar," Councillor Watson said, "for I haven't seen him in months. I did send him some nomination papers, to get signatures, and I did send him a few dollars for the work."

After which the young Curley men in the gallery got to it that they had said no more than a dozen words without interruption. Watson kept his temper, worked at his speech time, and stood by his guns until the rowdies were quieted and the situation relieved by the arrival of Mr. Kenny, cheered and applauded for minutes as "the next Mayor of Boston."

"I challenge Mr. Curley," Mr. Kenny said, "to name any improvement which has been brought about by the City Council during the last four years in which I have not been actively concerned. As chairman of the Committee on Finance there is no single appropriation in which I have not had a part. Throughout my four years in the Council I have heartily co-operated with the citizens in every section of the city, and my record during this time indicates to you better what shall be my future course as Mayor than any promises that I can ever make."

"I consider home lessons for children of the proper age an excellent thing," said Superintendent Dyer. "Here in Boston we do not give them below the sixth grade, but the older children in the elementary schools profit by them, I am sure.

MISS SCHENCK GOES HOME TO DIE

Taken Back to Virginia by Her Parents After Seven Years of Tragic Career.

By ADA PATTERSON.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—Seven years ago Florence Schenck ran away from her home in Norfolk, Va., to "see the world."

Today she was taken back, her condition an eloquent comment on what awaits beautiful, willful girls in that "world" they so long to "see."

Dr. Powhatan Schenck, her father, had come to New York two days before with his wife, a semi-invalid, on the saddest holiday journey taken by any pair in that fine old State.

They came to bid farewell to their dying daughter in the sanitarium in New York. When they found that the end was not so near as they thought, her mother's wish prevailed.

"Take her home to die," said the frail woman, who had not seen her daughter for seven years.

Dr. Teague, who had attended the girl in her last illness and performed the operation that at the most might not save, but would prolong her life, protested against moving his patient.

IN A STATE OF COMA.

"She is too weak. She may die on the way," he said.

But Dr. Powhatan Schenck is a father with the stuff of old Romans in him. He is health commissioner of Norfolk. There are rumors that an epidemic of smallpox threatens his city. His duty he believes is at his post.

"If she dies on the way, I shall have done my duty," he said. Miss Schenck was in a state of coma when she was carried on a litter aboard the train that left for Norfolk Friday night.

If Miss Schenck rallies she will be a bedridden invalid for the remainder of her days. The lower half of her body is paralyzed.

She was seventeen when she ran away from her home in the company of Charles Wilson, Alfred Vanderbilt's whip.

LIVED ON CHARITY.

She had recently brought suit against Wilson for fraud for a marriage which she declares took place in Paddington, England, three days before the interlocutory decree from the former Mrs. Wilson was in full force. The case was recently argued before Justice Gavagan, who reserved his decision.

For the last year Miss Schenck had dropped out of sight even of her former associates. A detective sent in search of her found her living on the bounty of a cafe keeper in Eighth avenue.

She was in rags. The feet that had been accustomed to silk hose and French slippers were encased in a cast-off pair of men's shoes. For the last year she had lived upon the charity of more prosperous friends. Fred Schultz, a detective once in the employ of Wilson, but latterly a friend of Miss Schenck, will follow her to Norfolk, as is her wish.

CURLEY SPEAKS AT THREE RALLIES

Congressman Curley spoke at three rallies last night—in Mission Hall, Ward 13, in Ward 13 and at Wood's Theatre in Brighton, Ward 25.

At the Brighton rally there were about 1,000 present. Here Curley charged that Francis McLaughlin, the Ward 25 Democratic chairman, had demanded of him $1,000 for election expenses.

"He told me he must be the only one recognized in Ward 25," said Curley. "I told him that when the time came I must pay to the people, Mayor, it would be time for me to be listed and deservedly. I told him he had better go down and see Kenny and Ballantyne and sell out to them."

Curley said his own father was a laborer and that he himself as a lad had to work seven hours for twenty-five cents, carrying market baskets.

Curley said:

"I sympathize greatly with my opponent, Mr. Kenny, in this contest, and regret exceedingly that a man, with the experience in public life of my opponent, should serve as the agent of the steam railroad interests headed by Richard Olney, who presided at the meeting of the Citizens' Municipal League, where permission was granted Mr. Kenny to run as a candidate for the office of Mayor.

"As chief Magistrate of the city, if such a calamity were visited upon the city, my opponent, Mr. Kenny, would be at liberty to serve only the people, but the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad.

"Mr. Kenny led the fight opposing the laying out of streets in Dorchester, Brighton, West Roxbury and other sections of the city, on the ground that the city could not afford to borrow money outside the debt limit. In doing this he followed the urgent request of the Good Government Association of which Lawrence Minot is the leading light."

NEWPORT WIDOW IN SULU ROMANCE

in this country a year to raise money for his work, is now in California, on the eve of departing for the Orient.

Catherine S. Berryman was married in 1892 to Lorillard Spencer, who died in March, 1912, leaving her over a million dollars. She has one son, Lorillard, who married Mary Ridgely Sands seven years ago.

Bishop Charles H. Brent is one of the most remarkable figures in the Episcopal Church. He is about fifty years old. Born, educated and ordained in Canada, he came to Boston and joined the Cowley Brotherhood, whose headquarters are at No. 13 Bowdoin street.

He took the three vows of poverty, chastity and celibacy. Later he left the Cowley Brotherhood, together with some other members, who were not in full sympathy with the order. He renounced the brotherhood vows and became the ordinary Episcopal cleric he was before.

CONSECRATED IN BOSTON.

His work then as rector, then rector of St. Stephen's Church and, when we acquired the Philippines, was elected Bishop of the Philippines at a general Episcopal convention in 1901. He was consecrated as Bishop at Emmanuel Church, Boston, and sailed to his new and difficult field of labor.

Bishop Brent has done marvellous work in the Philippines. He helped suppress the opium traffic. He has been a tremendous force in uplifting the islands. He is a personal friend of former Presidents Taft and Roosevelt and of Governor-General Forbes of the island group.

Six years ago he was offered the bishopric of Washington, where he would be located among the most influential and cultured people. But he refused to give up his Philippine work.

DEATH AND RUIN IN JERSEY GALE

Seabright Hard Hit by Seventy-Mile Storm That Lashes the Coast.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Jan. 3.—One man is dead and several others were injured as a result of the terrific storm which has swept Atlantic City and adjoining towns for the past twelve hours.

Scores have been driven from their homes and considerable damage has been done to property along the beach.

George Bedford, a federal life guard, died as a result of injuries received while assisting in rescuing families at Ocean City, two miles below here.

Along the northern Jersey and Long Island coasts the storm has increased in velocity during the day.

The situation is most grave at Seabright, N. J., where the heavy waves have washed away almost every vestige of the sea wall and bulkheads, leaving a large portion of the town, including hotels and costly Summer homes, exposed.

Early this evening the velocity of the wind at Seabright was between sixty and seventy miles an hour. The Octagon Hotel is practically a total wreck tonight. The loss is estimated at $175,000.

PLENTY OF GEMS

Record for Imports of Bauble

FOR "HARD-UP" RICH

NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—All records were broken for the 1913 importations of precious stones, which were valued at $46,137,328, at the New York Custom House. This in spite of the general complaint among the wealthy of the cost of living and the scarcity of real money. In 1906, the best previous year, the imports were $2,500,000 less than they were for last year.

ARREST AFFINITY EARLE IN NORWAY

Held, With Miss Herman, in Connection With Kidnaping of Son from School.

CHRISTIANIA, Norway, Jan. 3.—Ferdinand Pinney Earle and Miss Charlotte Herman, who posed as Mrs. Earle, were brought here tonight by the police, after having been arrested at Toten, in the interior of Norway, on a French warrant charging the abduction of Earle's eight-year-old son, Harold. Miss Herman is from Rutherford, N. J. The arrest was brought about by Piccard, a French detective, who has trailed Earle and Miss Herman since they kidnaped the boy from a school at LeMotte Beuvon, near Paris, last November.

The boy is now on his way to his mother, Mrs. Marie Fischbacher, Earle's first wife, at Paris, in charge of M. C. L. Steeg, former French minister at Christiania.

Earle gave out a statement tonight in which he said he had been living in Norway since three days after he took his son from the French school.

TENDERLY KISSED HER, SHE SAYS, AND NEVER CAME BACK

SAYS BROKER FLED TO ESCAPE DEBTS

Wife of Richard A. Stuetzel Undecided on Divorce; Consoled by Poodle.

Mrs. Hazel B. Stuetzel of Allston, whose husband, Richard A. Stuetzel, a Boston curb broker, kissed her a tender goodby five weeks ago, and disappeared, says the real reason he went away was his fear of his creditors.

The wife, who at first was bent on getting a divorce, now says she isn't at all decided.

"I have not made up my mind to seek a divorce," she declares.

She said she would like to know where he is just to relieve her anxiety. This was her statement when seen at her apartment at No. 1367 Commonwealth avenue last night:

"He even called me up from the South station to say 'goodby' a second time, and to tell me to be a good little girl while he was away. 'I will bring you a nice present for Christmas, too,' he said. That was the last I heard of him.

"He left because he was heavily in debt and was troubled to death by his creditors all the time. Since he left creditors have called here almost very day to dun him. The stock business had been bad for some time, and he was geting deeper and deeper in debt. That is why he left. He was afraid to face his creditors.

"When he left he said he might go to Arizona, but he didn't have money enough for that. He took every cent in the house with him, though, and left me penniless.

"My mother has come to live with me this Winter, and I guess we can manage all right. While I feel that Richard did wrong to leave me the way he did, I have not yet made up my mind to seek a divorce."

Throughout her period of anxiety following the departure of her husband, Mrs. Stuetzel declares that her pet dog, Tungo, a French toy poodle, has been her solace and bosom companion.

"I just couldn't get along without Tungo," Mrs. Stuetzel declared.

GRAFT CHARGE IN CEDARCREST CASE

Books, Said to Contain Prominent Names, Must Be Produced in Court.

The sensation of the Cedarcrest Country Club raid, which has been battened down under the hatches to date, [illegible] yesterday during an all-day hearing in the Quincy court, but [illegible] did the disappearing act [illegible] for the present. This was the [illegible] centering about the official [illegible] members of the club.

[illegible] is reported to contain the names of prominent and wealthy men, Harvard graduates and others. Both Mrs. B. Grace Reynolds, treasurer of the club, and her pretty daughter, Miss Gertrude, the club's secretary, answered questions regarding the membership roster.

Late in the afternoon, after spectators had waited breathlessly through five and a half hours of testimony for light on the club membership, Mrs. Reynolds assured Judge Avery that she would produce the record books in court next Friday morning.

"I forgot to bring the books today," she replied in answer to a query as to whether she hadn't promised to show the books in court yesterday.

MUST PRODUCE BOOKS.

"That's a question you can answer," said Judge Avery.

"Well, I forgot to bring them," said Mrs. Reynolds.

"Want you promise to bring the books next Friday at 9 a. m.?"

"Yes, I'll do that."

Mrs. Reynolds—who was on the stand in the case against George E. Fogg, accused of transporting liquor illegally in the town of Braintree—was held in $100 on her own recognizance, as a witness for the continued hearing Friday. Fogg was held in the same amount.

Mrs. Reynolds and her two daughters, Misses Gertrude and Edna, both very attractive, were the principal witnesses, with Inspector Goodhue of the Quincy police, who led the raid, and Chief of Police Hunt of Braintree.

Chief Hunt brought out sensational points regarding the charges of police bribery and graft in the case.

"Mrs. Reynolds told me," said the Chief, "that Officer Dugan of the Braintree force, came to her with another officer and said:

"'Give me a piece of change and I'll keep quiet.'

"She reported this to me. I investigated and found her story was true."

While on the stand the Chief was told by Judge Avery to "answer the questions more directly and without blushing."

SAMPLED THE RUM.

Miss Gertrude Reynolds said she never saw any money pass for any drinks that might have been served. She said she didn't know about the club's directors.

Inspector Goodhue raised a laugh when he testified one of three jugs he had in the court room held rum, because he had "sampled it." He said he smelled the odor of beer in glasses on the tables.

"Mrs. Reynolds told me she paid $150 for rent," said Goodhue. "Of this $100 was for the rent, so I asked her what the other $50 was for.

"'I wish you wouldn't ask me about that other $50,' she said to me."

Little in Will for New Lord DeFreyne

LONDON, Jan. 3.—The new Lord DeFreyne apparently did not benefit to any etxent by the will of his late father, according to the terms of the will, published today. The DeFreyne estate is valued at $500,000, and all of the cattle and sheep have been sold, and from the proceeds of this sale the widow will receive money due her. The present Lord DeFreyne received certain real estate, but most of the property was left to the widow. The young Lord DeFreyne served for some time in the United States Army.

Policeman, Ousted, Now Seeks Pension

Former Policeman Timothy J. Golden of the Quincy force, who was discharged a week ago by Mayor Stone of that city on a charge of being incapacitated for duty, yesterday filed a petition at Quincy City Hall for a hearing to get a pension.

Golden claims that he was kicked by a man ten years ago while on duty, and that since that time he has suffered from paralysis which at times kept him from work.

Three-Cent Break a Bushel in Corn

CHICAGO, Jan. 3.—Corn prices dropped today, January delivery breaking nearly three cents a bushel. The same corn that four days ago brought 71 cents, sold this morning at 61½, a fall of nearly 10 cents. The fact that the leading long here had hedged his holdings by sales of the May option brought on much pressure from the speculators who held bearish views. A smash in values was the result.

CASSIDY SHOWS HOW COFFEE FRAUDS CAN NOW BE FOUND AND HOTEL AND CAFE MEN PUNISHED

Cites Method Discovered by Professor Le Wall of Philadelphia

By HARRY E. CASSIDY.

Many times during my nine years of fraudulent food investigations in Philadelphia, and since I have been in Boston, I have been asked, "Have you ever investigated or analyzed the coffee served at this or that restaurant or at such and such big hotel?"

I should say for the benefit of the readers of the AMERICAN I was fast as shipboard on the seas. I was finally convicted by exhibition was being carried on. I would find imitation coffee on the shelves in their kitchens.

Under one term I was obliged to find it to the finished product, or beverage, of restaurants and hotels.

Ergo, it was served to me frequently in such chief, suspicious conditions that my chemists could not determine what it was.

SOME GOOD NEWS

Here is some good news in an outraged consuming public. Professor Charles H. La Wall and his assistant, Leroy Herman, of Philadelphia, have made it their business to perfect the detection of chicory in decoctions of chicory and coffee. The news has been published in full in the American Journal of Pharmacy, December 1912.

Professor Charles La Wall is one of the chemists connected with the Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Department. He is also one of the instructors at the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, one of the oldest and best institutions in America. Professor La Wall has written many other important papers, which have been accepted by the scientific bodies. He is in addition one of the compilers of the United States Pharmacopoeia. We are all grateful to the professor for working out this difficult problem.

Professor La Wall has already certified to his department several important cases against some of Philadelphia's most select food-ness men's restaurants and hotels.

ANALYSTS SAMPLES

In their samples they determined, first, the ash of extractive, and second, the percentage of reducing sugars calculated in the extractive previously determined. The amount of extractive alone is also known, of course, as no knowledge is usually obtainable concerning the ratio of ground coffee in the decoction.

When brewers, as they term, they come to consider the ratio of the extractive to the reducing sugars, they find that a very close line of demarcation exists by which it is possible to conclusively say the presence of as small an amount as 5 per cent. of chicory in the ground coffee, and experience has shown, by the examination of ground coffee, that usually amounts than this are more likely to be used.

WHAT WAS DISCOVERED.

The results of the examination of the grandma coffee are as follows:

	Per cent. of extractive	Per cent. of reducing sugars in extractive
Pure roasted	1.64	3.00
Pure boiled (roasted)	1.64	3.00
Mocha	1.64	3.00
Mocha (roasted)	1.64	3.00
Java	1.64	3.00
Java (roasted)	1.64	3.00
Santos	1.64	3.00
Santos (roasted)	1.64	3.00
Coffee (roasted)	1.40	3.05
Maximum	2.10	3.05
Minimum	1.40	3.00
Average	1.64	3.00

Samples of two genuine specimens of roasted and ground chicory showed the following extracted in the same manner:

	Per cent. of extractive	Per cent. of reducing sugars
Chicory	4.10	37.00
Chicory	4.10	37.00

It will be seen on comparing the results of coffee and chicory that the extractive matter alone stands no definite information upon which to base a conclusion, but that the percentage of reducing sugars is the attractive matter is so widely different as to afford a ready means of detecting chicory in a decoction of coffee.

RESULTS OF MIXTURES SHOWN

Sample mixtures of chicory and coffee were made on using the chicory showing the lowest ratio and the coffee showing the highest ratio. The results were as follows:

	Per cent. of extractive	Per cent. of reducing sugars in extractive
95 per cent. coffee, 5 per cent. chicory	1.64	3.00
90 per cent. coffee, 10 per cent. chicory	1.70	3.10
85 per cent. coffee, 15 per cent. chicory	1.76	3.20
80 per cent. coffee, 20 per cent. chicory	1.82	3.30
75 per cent. coffee, 25 per cent. chicory	1.88	3.40
70 per cent. coffee, 30 per cent. chicory	1.94	3.50
65 per cent. coffee, 35 per cent. chicory	2.00	3.60
60 per cent. coffee, 40 per cent. chicory	2.06	3.70
55 per cent. coffee, 45 per cent. chicory	2.12	3.80
50 per cent. coffee, 50 per cent. chicory	2.18	3.90

With the exception of the sample in which 5 per cent. chicory and 95 per cent. coffee were used, which is but within the limits of the highest ratio observed in a pure coffee, the results all directly and positively point to the adulteration of the coffee with a substance high in reducing sugars.

The addition of 5 per cent. of cane sugar to 95 per cent. of coffee did not appreciably alter the results by the reductive sugar method, as shown by the following figures:

	Per cent. of extractive	Per cent. of reducing sugars in extractive
95 per cent. coffee, 5 per cent. cane sugar	1.64	3.00

CONFIRMATORY METHOD

While the addition of the cane sugar could very readily be detected by a polarimetric examination, the above mixture showing a reading of several degrees to the right, the reading of the pure chicory decoction (containing inulin) to the left, the small amount of reducing material was negative, owing presumably to an approximate balancing of dextrose and levulose in the mixture.

BOSTON & MAINE WOULD ABOLISH MIDNIGHT TRAINS ON THE PLEA OF "POVERTY"

Commuters Urged to Attend Hearing on Tuesday by Public Service Board

The midnight theatre trains to Lowell, Lawrence, Haverhill and way stations upon the Boston & Maine Railroad will be discontinued IF the petition of the Boston & Maine upon which the Public Service Commission gives a hearing Tuesday IS GRANTED.

The reasons given by the railroad are that the trains do not earn their operating expenses, and the extra expense attending the railroad requires the discontinuance of a service which does not pay.

In the hearing before the Railroad Commission last January when midnight theatre trains were recommended by the commission it was made plain that these trains were not expected to pay their operating expenses, and their existence was justified if they accommodated any considerable number of persons.

The late train campaign was conducted by the Boston AMERICAN, aided by the theatrical managers, hotel keepers, Boston Opera House and other institutions, as well as the Boston Chamber of Commerce.

As a result the residents of the suburbs have enjoyed unparalleled service during the Winter Spring and Fall months.

FIGURES TELL STORY.

The Boston & Maine intends to base its entire argument before the commission upon its poverty stricken condition. That the trains on the Boston & Maine have been justified is shown by the following figures.

The Lowell, Lawrence and Haverhill trains were started last February. During that month they carried 4,500 persons. The Haverhill train carried 2,252 passengers, an average of 302 per night.

The Lowell train carried 2,203 persons, an average of 294 per night.

During the month of March patronage increased, and the height of the theatrical season. During March these two trains carried 5,455 persons, divided as follows: Haverhill train, 2,765; Lowell, 2,690.

The average per night was Lowell 101, Haverhill 107.

In April business fell off, for the season was over and the trains carried 4,500 people.

In May business increased again and 5,500 people were carried, an average of 302 for Haverhill and 180 for Lowell.

In June the theatres closed and the average fell to 250 persons for the Haverhill train and 70 persons for the Lowell train per night.

During October of this season the patronage averaged 454 per train for Haverhill and 180 for Lowell.

In November 4,500 persons were carried, an average of 225 for Haverhill and 84 for Lowell.

DEMAND IS CONSTANT.

Thus it is shown that there has been a constant and good demand for these trains.

The railroad's scheme is to remove the trains while retaining most of the business and the petition comes to shift the Haverhill train which now leaves the city at 10.45, the Washing Highlands train which is now set at 11.05 to 11.45, and the Lowell train which is now set at 11.30, the Nashua, running through to Nashua.

The Sunday AMERICAN urges all persons interested to ATTEND the hearing. This newspaper has no wish to be unfair, but these trains have earned a right to exist and the only argument which carries any weight for their discontinuance is the very serious condition of the Boston & Maine railroad system.

Mrs. Frances Key, of Back Bay, in Odd Fight

She Is Rich, But "Camps Out" in Bare Mansion

MRS. FRANCES DUER KEY, a Back Bay society woman, who is as well known in London, Paris and Vienna as she is in Boston, has started a legal fight to establish her sanity and regain direct control of her fortune.

Mrs. Key charges that certain of her relatives are in a conspiracy to get her property and to have her adjudged a menace.

She and her legal counsel are preparing for the event they anticipate in the summonses. They are actively carrying out Mrs. Key's home in Beacon street, which she established and occupies.

It is an odd spectacle, an unusual ordeal for a social sentiment and favorite of society. But it is a tragic thing after all, and sometimes wears like key are the last twelve months.

DAUGHTERS AT HAD CHEER.

Mrs. Key is a cousin by marriage of Boris Sidnie Pond, and a niece of Fanny Rice, and her attorney W. K. Post of New York. Her two daughters are students at Radcliffe College. They are Miss Frances Lee Key, twenty-three, and Miss Catherine Key, twenty-one. At present both are visiting the holiday days in New York.

Last January Mrs. Key was placed in an insane asylum, she explains, in order to get a separate maintenance. She was subsequently liberated after a temporary detention as was supposed. In June she went to Europe without the consent of her guardian, William H. Dunbar of Cambridge, and a commission was made permanent two days after she sailed. In order to go abroad Mrs. Key was obliged to borrow from servants, she and her maid were shadowed by detectives, she says. She was arrested, "for nothing," and later set free, she says.

In Europe she was stricken ill, she complains, that she suffered terrible loss financially and physically. She claims she has been robbed on pale by the conveyances and in fashionable hotels in Paris, at Cannes, and on shores as an "escaped lunatic."

With funds supplied by E. S. Hanson, a wealthy uncle in Philadelphia, Mrs. Key returned to Boston and took a house. After a stay in Washington she returned to the Hanna street home in order to find that all the furniture had been removed.

With limited funds she bought a few cheap tables and chairs and a few beds. The parlor furnishings consist of two upholstered chairs covered with plain red leather, and there are probably ten small plants in the room. An old cooking stove should be mentioned figured with crimson roses. There was one Christmas wreath in the entire window. No other ornamentations were visible on the first floor.

HER HOME LOOKS BLEAK.

Compared with the lavish appointments of the mansion right next door, compared with its elegance that always marked Mrs. Key's establishment when she entertained her guests—many of them in social circles—her present abode looks bleak and out of harmony.

It is in such a home that Mrs. Key has established herself in, protected to date by freedom from legal restraint.

She has engaged Attorney Hyacinthe Ringrose, a London barrister, who has conducted important money cases in this country and abroad, to defend her interests. Attorney Ringrose filed a petition in the Suffolk Probate Registry a few days ago asking that Mr. Dunbar, who has a law office at No. 161 Devonshire street, be removed as guardian. The petition cites:

WILL RETURN THE FURNITURE.

Such guardianship is no longer necessary because your petitioner is sane and competent to manage herself and her affairs.

January 8 is return day. It is expected that a hearing will be granted on January 13, when Attorney William H. Dunbar, Mrs. Key's guardian, and yesterday.

Mrs. Key was committed in a legal way and under the usual proceedings. She was examined by two physicians. They pronounced her insane. I was appointed her guardian. Soon after I was asked to sign my name to something with my left hand. I did. Furniture and effects are stored. If she desires upon living at No. 473 Beacon street the furniture will be returned to her.

I allow her enough to live at the Copley Plaza Hotel, where she lived before, or at any hotel she may choose. It is not necessary for her to live as she is living at present, but if she doesn't want to go to a hotel what can I do? I have been notified that her attorney has petitioned for my removal. No date has been set for a hearing.

Mrs. Key's mother and relatives in New York are doing their utmost to have her properly cared for. They have no selfish motives nor ever have they wished to wrong or persecute her.

RELEASE SUSPECT IN FALLON CASE

Watch and Ward, However, Continue Work on Story of Drugging and Kidnaping.

The case of Rose Fallon, the eighteen-year-old telephone operator of Brookline, who has been restored to her parents with an incoherent story of being kidnaped, drugged and imprisoned in a cellar, gained added mystery yesterday, when her family backed up the girl's account, even after the police ceased working on the matter.

The West Roxbury police took a young man named Lord, who was brought him to the Fallon home, where Rose identified him as someone she knew. Then the youth told a straight story, the police said, and accounted for his movements during the four days Rose was away from home. He was later released.

The police said that Dr. Malone, the Fallon family physician, reported to them that the girl had not been harmed. The police finally refused to credit the items of a mysterious auto ride, or drugged candy and confinement in a cellar.

But telephone inquiry at the house last night was answered by a man who said he is Rose's brother-in-law and that the family believes what she has told is true.

The Watch and Ward Society, however, has kept after the girls story with keen interest. A man was located who says that he and his wife saw a girl Friday night on Columbus avenue who resembled the picture of Rose Fallon published in the American. He added:

"We both saw that her mouth muscles were flaccid and uncontrolled, her eyes were dim and pupils so enlarged as completely to obscure the iris. She was obviously under the influence of some drug. The girl disappeared. The police description corresponded absolutely with that of the girl we saw."

Legislator Returns 'Unearned' Salary

PROVIDENCE, Jan. 3.—Because he thinks he is not entitled to the money, George C. Cranston, Representative from North Kingston, has returned to the State Treasurer his $1,200 salary for the last session of the Legislature, stating he felt he had not earned the money. Mr. Cranston was in attendance only at roll call on several occasions at the session, partly owing to illness.

REGAL GOWNS AT FIRST ASSEMBLY

Fashion Triumphs at Society Event, Really Most Exclusive of Season.

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.

The season and [illegible] event of season, the First Assembly, has come and gone, leaving in its train a lot of tired [illegible] fashionables, and ill-at-ease [illegible] heartless burning hearts. The [illegible] settled on Boston [illegible] and hundreds who [illegible] to the last moment and hoped that this year they might be admitted within the charmed [illegible] have horridly [illegible] for the event so far forgot. Two hundred guests at the ball Friday night and a gay and happy affair it was—the range, which was so rigidly excluded last year, they donned to their heart's content.

There was no canopy at the entrance, there were no ushers and no decorations, but its enough just to be allowed to attend these affairs without the frills.

The cotillion was led by S. Hooper-Hooper, whose partner was that delightful little matron, Mrs. Edward Brathwaite.

Mrs. Brathwaite was at her best in a trailing gown of old rose satin, trimmed with gold, and a becoming ornament of old rose, black velvet and gold in her well-done coiffure.

IN THE RECEIVING LINE.

In the receiving line were Mrs. Bryce J. Allen, Mrs. Rudolph L. Agassiz, Miss Mary Shreve Ames, Mrs. Henry D. Burnham, Mrs. S. V. R. Crosby, Mrs. William E. Endicott, Mrs. Henry S. Hounewell, Mrs. Joseph Grafton Minot, Mrs. Philip S. Sears and Mrs. Frederick Winthrop, all of whom were patronesses.

The other patronesses were Mrs. Gorham Abbott, Mrs. E. Preble Motley, Mrs. Francis Peabody, Mrs. Charles E. Perkins, Mrs. Charles S. Sargent, Mrs. Bayard Thayer, Mrs. Barrett Wendell, Jr., and Mrs. Roger Wolcott.

By far the prettiest of the younger girls present was Miss Elise Ames, in white satin with minaret of white chiffon edged with a ruching of the same material and a cluster of orchids tucked in the fluff of her chiffon bodice. Her only ornament was a string of pearls. With her came her pretty sister, Elise, in pale blue satin embroidered in pearls and a minaret of palest pink chiffon embroidered in gold.

Honors among the younger matrons should be divided between Mrs. Frederick Winthrop and Mrs. Barrett Wendell, Jr.

Mrs. Winthrop was in a gown of white satin with overdress of heavy cream lace. A wide band of delft blue showed underneath the minaret and a girdle of the same shade gave the desired touch of color. Circling her dark hair was a band of pearls.

Mrs. Wendell was in black velvet with long pointed train and lined with crimson satin. On the corsage was a generous touch of the same color and underneath the rather deep slit in front was a drape of black chiffon embroidered in gold over crimson satin. In her hair she wore a large black osprey.

MRS. WOLCOTT IN WHITE.

Mrs. Roger Wolcott wore a gown of white satin trimmed with bands of black velvet embroidered in gold. In her hair she wore a black aigrette.

Mrs. Chandler Hovey was an attractive young matron in a gown of brocaded velvet.

Another of the most attractive of the matrons was Mrs. Henry S. Hunnewell, in pale lavendar satin with minaret of cream lace and a cluster of orchids on the corsage.

One of the younger matrons who is still, though the mother of several promising youngsters, one of the best dancers of her set, was Mrs John Purkinson, Jr., who wore a tango gown of dark blue velvet with minaret of black net edged with fur.

Mrs. Curtis Guild never looked better than in her gown of white satin with tunic of white net heavily embroidered in jet, a bow and streamers of black chiffon at the back and a cluster of black roses on the corsage. A large black and white aigrette worn in the hair completed the effect.

CHARLES M. GUY, AS HE LOOKS WITH HIS WHISKERS TRIMMED

Before going to the Governor's Council he had the celebrated beard reduced. Here he is.

ORIGINAL GUY CLIPS WHISKERS

Councillor-Elect Prepares for Inaugural; Would Make Convicts Sunday School Teachers.

Fact. He did it himself. He says he's just beginning to make good his promise to go clean shaven to Beacon Hill.

The famous shoemaker-farmer-merchant and Conqueror of Guy A. Ham of Boston has mowed his full-blown set of Yankee chin whiskers down to a mere Dutch stubble, an eighth of an inch in length.

Not only that, but's he's gotten a new set of teeth.

"Makes my voice more chipper and clearer," he says.

The renovations are all preliminary to his being inaugurated as a full-fledged Councillor within a short time. But Guy's going to stick to his old Prince Albert and his paper collars for State occasions. And what is more, he doesn't fear catching a cold now that his chin-protecting whiskers are gone.

Guy had a sort of a rehearsal the other day of his coming triumphal journey to the State House. He took the trolley into Boston and walked up to Beacon Hill. He called on Executive Council Secretary Hamlin. They discussed—whiskers.

"I think I'll cut 'em all off," ventured Guy.

"Oh, don't," said Hamlin. "Do leave them on, only in a shorter chin style."

"I'll do it," said Guy. "I'll crop 'em down close."

1,400 Yard Men Get Pay Raised

Wages will be immediately increased at the Charlestown Navy Yard, according to a statement by Secretary Daniels in Washington. It is not known yet in what lines the raise will come.

The action is general through the country and will affect 1,400 employes in the Boston and other navy yards. The increase will aggregate $50,000 annually.

B. & M. WILL SAVE 8000 TRAIN MILES

Curtailment of Service Under New Economy Plan Goes Into Eect on Jan. 11.

The first of the compulsory New Year's resolutions made by the management of the Boston & Maine Railroad will go into effect on January 11. In compliance with the stricter economy regime there will be a reduction in passenger service. Trains little patronized or found to be unprofitable will be cut off.

The first stroke promises to save 8,000 train miles a week. This will dispose of fifty men from train crews. It was announced last night that the trains to be taken off will not affect greater Boston to any great extent. The reductions will be confined chiefly to distant branch line service such as the Southern and Portland divisions.

Reports from New Haven that 10 per cent cut was to be made on the New Haven among shop employes, engineers and firemen were denied at th publicity department of the South Station yesterday. It that some cutting of the working forces had been necessary was admitted.

It was stated that no reduction in passenger trains was planned on the New Haven system. President Hustis said:

"The number of engineers, firemen and trainmen employed fluctuate, particularly with the amount of the freight business handled. No sweeping reductions in the working forces are contemplated.

"The gross earnings during the first half of the fiscal year show a reduction. This means that less men are needed and there has been adjustments of forces and hours to meet existing conditions."

Archduke Gave Lord a Servant's Honor

LONDON, Jan. 2.—A mistake in the bestowal of honors by Archduke Ferdinand of Austria during his recent visit to King George has been the cause of much amusement at the Court of St. James.

The archduke conferred the Order of the Iron Crown upon Lord Charles Fitzmaurice, one of the King's equerries, who was in personal attendance on him during his visit. The same decoration was given to King George's valet and the chief chef of the palace. This honor is reserved usually for servants of the first rank.

When the error was discovered a letter of apology was sent to Lord Charles with the explanation that the order given him should have been the Iron Cross, which was forwarded with the letter.

BREAKING OUT ITCHED AND BURNED

On Hands and Wrists. Could Not Put Hands in Water or Do Work. Lost Many Nights of Sleep. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Cured.

Alburg, Vt.—"My trouble began by breaking out like rash. It was on my hands and wrists and itched and burned so that I would have to scratch it. I could not put my hands in water or do my work. The trouble caused me to lose a good many nights of sleep. The trouble lasted a month or two until I heard of Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I washed my hands and wrists with Cuticura Soap and dried them well and then I would apply the Cuticura Ointment on them. I used the Cuticura Soap and Ointment about two weeks and I saw at once that the disease began to leave and in three weeks and a half it was completely cured." (Signed) Mrs. Isaiah Boutah, Jr., Jan. 1, 1913.

BABY'S RASH LIKE BLISTERS

No. Waterford, Me.—"Our baby broke out on his feet, legs and hands. It appeared as a rash but soon looked like blisters on his feet and hands. He scratched a good deal and was very cross and fretful night and day for several weeks. We had used remedies which seemed to do no good. We used hot water and Cuticura Soap then applied Cuticura Ointment every night. Soon after two weeks. Two cakes of the Cuticura Soap and two boxes of the Cuticura Ointment completely cured him." Signed: Ernest Brown, June 30, 1913.

Cuticura Soap 25c and Cuticura Ointment 50c, are sold everywhere. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

☞Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

Often Imitated But Never Equalled

When a remedy has been before the public for more than half a century, has been prescribed and used by the best doctors and in prominent hospitals, and has carried the blessings of health into as many thousands of homes as Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey has, imitations are bound to arise. Don't be deceived by imitations of this renowned medicinal whiskey. The genuine is sold in sealed bottles only.

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey

is a pure, wholesome, healthful medicinal whiskey, produced without regard to expense in compliance with the test requirements of the United States Pharmacopoeia, and in both quality and wholesomeness is immeasurably superior to whiskey made from that standard. Its color, which is pleasant to the eye, is a soft amber obtained wholly from the wood. Unlike most whiskies, its taste is pleasant and inviting, with an odor delicately rich and agreeable. Physicians declare it is retained by the stomach when other whiskies and liquors are rejected.

It has carried the blessings of health into thousands of homes during the past fifty years, and Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey stands today without a rival as one of the greatest body builders and health givers known to science.

How to Live Long—Use Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey as directed. It aids in building up the nerve tissues, tones the heart, gives power to the brain, strength and elasticity to the muscles, and richness to the blood; it brings into play all the vital forces because it stimulates the mucous surfaces and little glands of the stomach to a healthy action, thereby improving the digestion and assimilation of the food and giving to the system its full proportion of nourishment.

Our illustrated medical booklet, containing letters from grateful patients and common sense rules for health, and doctor's advice, sent free on request. The Duffy Malt Whiskey Co., Rochester, N. Y.

Refused to Accept a Substitute For Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey

"A short time ago I went into a store and asked for Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey. The clerk did his utmost to sell me another malt whiskey which he represented was better or at least just as good as Duffy's. I became very angry, for I knew his reason of trying to sell me a substitute for an article that was so well known and popular, and used and recommended by physicians and hospitals all over the world.

"This store is one like some others that sell a well advertised and popular article at cost, and sometimes less than cost, using it as a bait. Then they try to sell the customer their own unknown article at the same price as the well advertised article. Buy on their substitute they are making an extra profit, and often when it is an article of food or drink, this extra profit is made at the expense of the customer's health.

"I am now over 67 years old and for many years I have used Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey. I was advised by my family doctor to take it three times a day before meals, as I had a backing cough. After ten days I noticed that my appetite increased wonderfully and it also helped my digestion, and I have not been troubled with a cough or indigestion since.

"My doctor says Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey is a pure, unadulterated and excellent remedy. He says that taken as a medicine and as directed by a physician it is a blessing to mankind."—Margaret Stroud, 1942 E. Allegheny Avenue, Philadelphia, Pa.

WHO WANTS THIS MAN FOR $2,000?

Good Husband, Sound and Kind, Bedell Is Willing to Be Sold.

Ladies and Gentlemen: Here is William Wadsworth Bedell of Quincy. He is willing to be sold for two thousand dollars and to be a good husband to the woman who gets him.

Mrs. Agnes E. Jones Bedell, his wife, offered Mr. Bedell for $1,000 to Miss Mary E. Chandler of Athol when she learned that Miss Chandler and her little baby, Eleanor, might be in need of a good husband to help manage her affairs. Miss Chandler has refused the offer. Mrs. Bedell will part with her husband to anyone having the price, she says.

This photograph shows Mr. Bedell in evening clothes in which it will be seen that he bears a strong resemblance to William Courtenay, the actor playing in "Under Cover" at the Plymouth, who has so many admirers among the fair sex.

In his work clothes Mr. Bedell does not present such a finished appearance, but Mrs. Bedell says that no matter how he is attired Mr. Bedell will not go for a cent less than two thousand.

The two thousand dollar husband, far from disliking this arrangement, joins his wife in the novel plan. He says he likes his wife, and Mrs. Bedell says that she admires Mr. Bedell, but they both agree to amicably disagree on the ground that they are not mated. They still live at No. 24 Water street, Quincy. Mr. Bedell does his part to keep the Bedell family clothed and fed by working at the Fore River Shipbuilding Company's plant.

"Agnes and I talked this plan over thoroughly before we decided that two thousand dollars should be the price" said Mr. Bedell. "I am against being 'knocked down' for less than that, because I want Agnes to be left with enough to maintain herself when I am sold out.

"It would be a good thing for many homes if other couples adopted our method and sold out."

Go Armed Against Stomach Trouble

A Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet Carried in Your Purse or Vest Pocket Will Enable You to Always Keep Your Stomach in Line

Don't let all sorts of stomach troubles, dyspepsia, gastritis, mal-nutrition, dyspepsy and vertigo make life a constant torture and an ultimate failure. The man who is going to succeed today must have his body, as well as his mind, in perfect working order. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are a necessity to the man who would always have his body in subjection to his will.

"I Eat When I Will, What I Want, Because After Each Meal I Take a Little Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet."

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets furnish just those elements—pepsin and other ingredients—that the normal stomach secretes for the digestion of food. One or two of these tablets will completely digest the heartiest meal without any aid from the stomach. At the same time they tone up and invigorate the enfeebled stomach so that it is soon in a healthy condition again.

Prudent men always have a box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets on hand. They make digestion certain—no matter what or how much is eaten. Don't think because your stomach is usually all right that you don't need them. The policeman carries a revolver not because he needs it all the time, but because when he does need it, he needs it right then. When you want relief from indigestion, you want relief at once. Be armed against stomach troubles with a box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. 50 cents at any drug store. Successful men everywhere endorse them and rely upon them.

Injured in Boiler House Explosion

Engineer Blown Twenty Feet as Neponset Pipe Blows Up.

While Henry J. Scriver, day engineer, was making repairs on the roof of the boiler house at the A. T. Stearns Lumber Company's plant at No. 97 Taylor street, Neponset, last night, an underground feed pipe in the house exploded, wrecking the building and hurling Scriver twenty feet.

He was cut on the head and face and badly shaken up. He was sent to his home, No. 10 Water street, Neponset.

The explosion shook nearby houses. Someone sent in a fire alarm. But the firemen found more steam than flames. The damage was $500.

Thief Writes, 'Duck Ain't Worth a Darn'

Stolen Bronze Mysteriously Returned to Academy.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3. — The little bronze statue of a duck which was stolen Wednesday from the exhibition of the National Academy of Design was returned today as mysteriously as it vanished.

A small, white hand thrust a newspaper-wrapped package through the ticket window of the exhibition rooms in Fifty-Seventh street.

On the newspaper was scrawled in a boyish hand:

Dinners at Palace Forbidden by King

LONDON, Jan. 3.—Members of the royal household having rooms in St. James Palace have been forbidden by King George to give supper parties there. The order was issued at the request of Queen Mary. A few weeks before Xmas one of the equerries, who is of a rather bibulous disposition, gave a supper party which ended somewhat uproariously. The Queen was determined that such festivities must be stopped.

Ernest W. Thompson on Matrimonial Rocks Again, New Bride Turns Actress.

Ernest W. Thompson, the Cambridge young man who sacrificed himself to permit his girl wife to marry his college chum, Tyler H. Bliss of Springfield, has had another matrimonial mishap.

Thompson and his second bride are not living together. She was Miss Marion Johnson, whose parents lived on Hamilton street, Dorchester, but who now live in Nahant.

Mrs. Thompson No. 2 left her husband six weeks ago to go on the stage. She is doing a dancing skit.

"Such is life," said Ernest to sympathizers. "If the worst comes, why I can get a third bride. Plenty of fish in the sea."

Bliss, who married Mrs. Thompson No. 1 met Thompson while both were students at Harvard. Bliss is the nephew of Arthur Luke, prominent in the steel industry. He is at present a reporter in Springfield.

"Yes, Tyler Bliss was my chum," said Thompson. "I knew he loved my wife. I thought she would be happier with Tyler than with me. I did not stand in their way, so I gave her legal cause for divorce. When I married Marion Johnson we stopped with Mr. and Mrs. Bliss on our return from our honeymoon."

Thompson married first when he was seventeen. He is twenty-seven now. His first wife was Carey W. Wade of Baltimore. A daughter was born to them. Mrs. Thompson No. 1 was divorced in Cambridge November 29, 1912.

Tyler Bliss married Mrs Thompson at Hartford, January 28, 1913. Thompson married Marion Johnson at Hartford, March 5, 1913.

Thompson lives at No. 71 Dana street, Cambridge. He is reported to have spent two fortunes left by relatives. Recently he filed a petition in bankruptcy.

MAGGIE TEYTE IN DEBUT AT OPERA

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

Maggie Teyte made her grand opera debut yesterday afternoon in "Boheme." The little English singer is a member of the Chicago company, but has already been successful here in concert.

She has her face and figure to recommend her as Mimi. The little Parisian working girl of Murger's story, with her backing cough and ill-nourished frame, loses half her pathos when played by a big prima donna with a huge voice.

Miss Tyte—we are tempted to refer to her as Maggie—is a mite herself, pretty in an elfish manner, with a small voice of a pure and lovely quality which she uses with much grace and the effect of a singer with a much greater equipment.

Histrionically she is admirable in every respect, and the tragedy of the last act was never more poignant than in her hands.

Margherita Berica, the French soprano, and former wife of Muratore, the tenor, made her debut in the important soprano role of Musetta. She is also very pretty, with a native Parisian vein of humor. She sang the waltz song with much taste and good tone.

Ancona, in the baritone part, Marcel, in his popular role of Colline, with the sonorous overcoat aria and Polish as Schaunard, were all admirable. The chorus singing and stage management were as usual worthy of praise.

Laffitte in the tenor part pleased us immensely by his fine singing in the first and last act, and made us wonder why he didn't sing better in the third act. Morandoni conducted with his customary excellence.

Last night the opera was "Aida." Margherita Dalvarez was in her great role of Amneris. Aida Angelova, an American girl, made her debut in the title role. Oppezzo sang Rhadames.

UNITED STATES AGAIN WARNS AMERICANS TO QUIT MEXICO; REBEL REVERSES REPORTED

State Department Issues Carefully Worded Bulletin About Perils South of Rio Grande.

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 3.—Reports persist that the Zapatistas have taken Cuernavaca, the southern gateway to the capital, but the government refuses to either confirm or deny the report. All communications to Cuernavaca have been cut.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—The State Department issued a warning today to Americans against the investment of industrial capital in Mexico.

This is accepted in official circles to mean that Tom Lind was unable to report any hope for the improvement of conditions in Mexico, at the secret conference with President Wilson on the Chester war-time christian.

Such a warning, it is pointed out, would not have been announced without advice from the President.

The bulletin is guarded, and reads in full as follows:

Reports have come to the department of State from various quarters of the residence in this part of numerous Americans who left Mexico, in August last, of a disposition to return to that country with a view to resume industrial operations to the belief that prospective conditions justify such action.

It will be recalled that relief work was carried out on a very broad scale during the past summer in removing Americans from zones of danger in Mexico.

The information in the possession of the Department of State indicates that economic and political conditions have not changed in such a way as to justify an attempt to return to Mexico and resume industrial operations there and that any purpose to take such a step is due to misunderstanding or to misrepresentations as to actual conditions and prospects at the present moment.

FEDERALS ARE GAINING.

Dispatches to the War Department indicate distinct advantage for the Mexican federals at Ojinaga and Lerdo. This information is based on the expert observation of United States army officers. They see this action according to the army experts, the theory advanced from Paso Christian that Huerta's army is without hope of ultimate success.

The army officials are disposed to connect very closely the pointed statement made by the State Department today with the success of the Federal arms within the past ten days and which was obvious before Envoy Lind left Vera Cruz. The trend of the military operations show instead of peace being near at hand the army officers believe the war will be prolonged and American citizens would take their lives and their investments in their own hands if they went into Mexico.

INVESTIGATE ATROCITIES.

The War Department has ordered a secret investigation of the atrocities perpetrated by Villa and the Carranzaistas in the towns which are being taken and retaken by the contending forces. Colonel Charles Hodgson, who is observing the Federals at Laredo, telegraphed today that the Federals had a distinct advantage at the close of today's fighting.

Four officers are more than three dead bodies carried across. A telegram from General Bliss said he had directed Colonel Hodgson to report on the atrocities in yesterday's fighting as detailed in the newspapers. Another telegram from General Bliss said: "The Federals so far hold their own."

This is the point at which the constitutionalists expected they could humiliate Huerta's army and get control of the northern part of Mexico. General Bliss added that "one thousand men and children, camp-followers and refugees, are on our side of the river, awaiting the outcome of the fighting. Immigration officials and the Red Cross are taking charge of them and I am co-operating and lending all possible assistance."

RENEW TAMPICO ATTACK.

Reports to the Navy Department indicate that while there are at least 1,500 Federals at Tampico the rebels who were defeated thereabout two weeks ago are returning to attack and are this time well provided with artillery.

In view of the renewal of hostilities it is said that the Connecticut and the Kansas will be held at Tampico indefinitely. The Chester, which left Paso Christian today with John Lind, will return to Vera Cruz, but will immediately go back to Tampico and join the Tacoma. This will leave the United States Navy four display vessels at that point.

It is expected that the Dolphin, which is to replace the Wheeling, being a light draught vessel, will proceed to Tampico and take station with the Tacoma in front of the city.

WILSON LAUGHS AT JOKE ON REPORTERS IN LIND VISIT "CRISIS"

PASS CHRISTIAN, Miss., Jan. 3.—No additional ray of light has been cast upon the Mexican problem, as a result of President Wilson's statement regarding his conference with Envoy Lind aboard the Chester yesterday.

Mr. Wilson laughingly said tonight that the event was of no particular importance, and seemed to think the joke was on the newspaper men, who jestingly indicated they owed him a debt of gratitude for providing so much copy on vacation.

The Chester, with Envoy Lind aboard, steamed out for Vera Cruz at a late hour today, according to a report which reached here. The two days of visiting Mr. Lind, who spent the day with him aboard the ship, returned to Paso Christian tonight.

'Should Worry' Girls to Dance

Nameless Club Now Named

Marie Panora, talented singer, helping to direct dance of East Boston 'Worry' Club.

East Boston Organization Harbors No Suffragette Within Its Ranks.

For a whole year fifteen of east Boston's prettiest girls have been bonded together as a social club, but have been unable to decided upon a suitable name for the club until New Year's eve when it was unanimously voted to christen it the "We Should Worry Club."

The girls say the club harbors no suffragettes and the slit skirt and some of the modern dances are not under the ban. The president, Marie Panora, a brunette, is a singer of much reputation and she says all of her sister members are talented. The "We should Worry Club" is to hold its first dance at Summer Hall, East Boston, Friday night, January 9.

The committee on dance is Marie Panora, Sofia Bruno, Ida Batchelder, Louise Bernard and Teresa Nocco. The other members assisting are Lillian Han Dooley, Celia Fleming, Martha Dooley, Ann Hurichey, Regina Felix, Gertrude Conley, Rose Mavretta, Mary De Stasio and Grace Coleman.

Barber In Hopeful of $10,000 Prize

Submits Plans in New Haven Contest for Emergency Stop.

An Italian barber of this city, with scant education and no mechanical training, is hopeful of receiving the $10,000 prize offered by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad for the best practical invention to stop a train in cases of emergency without the aid of an engineer or fireman.

He is Antonio Bellare, a native of Messina, who has been in the United States but a little more than eight years.

Simplicity is the keynote of Bellare's invention. An iron or steel rod is so placed between the rails that when a danger signal is set the rod is elevated. As the train passes, the raised rod trips its counterpart in the locomotive and starts mechanism that shuts off the power and sets the brakes. It doesn't matter if the engineer and fireman are asleep.

Trust Investigator for Wilson in Berlin

Found Acute Situation in England, Says Charles Ferguson.

BERLIN, Jan. 3.—Charles Ferguson, appointed by President Wilson to investigate "big business" in Europe, arrived at the Hotel Adlon today.

"My object is to study trusts and other great capitalist organizations as they are constructed in Europe," he said. "Also I shall undertake to find out the attitude of the various governments toward these organizations and what measures, if any, leading to regulation are contemplated.

"The problem of predatory capital is much the same in Europe as in the United States, although it is manifest in a different form. I found the situation to be very acute in England."

'Keep Out Politics,' Pleads Corcoran

"You owe it to yourselves and to your children to rebuke sternly any attempt to make the School Committee a political factor," said School Committeeman Michael H. Corcoran, Jr., the P. S. A. candidate for re-election, at Bloomfield Hall, Geneva avenue, Dorchester, last night.

"The qualifications of a candidate for the administrative work of our school system are his character, record, ability and experience. His politics has nothing to do with the matter. Nor has the politics of any group of people a legitimate interest in the schools. I, for one, prize the reputation of our schools too highly to permit it, insofar as I am able, to be made a plaything of politics."

Plan U. S. Customs Change in Canada

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—The Treasury Department is seriously considering withdrawing its customs agents at Montreal and other interior points in Canada. In place of the agents it is planned to hold trains thirty minutes at the Canadian border to permit the necessary examination of baggage and other goods.

ANNIVERSARY of our SALE LAST YEAR of the BUTLER APPAREL SHOPS' STOCKS

Cor. Washington & Winter Sts. Boston.

Rivaling in Magnitude—Exceeding in Values—Establishing a New High Record

Last year we bought and sold the entire stock of one of Boston's stores which failed. The Butler Apparel Shops corner Washington and Winter Street. At that time we held one of the biggest sales ever held in Boston.

The CROWDS and the BARGAINS are still remembered. NOW WE ARE DETERMINED TO TAKE THE RECORD OF THAT SUCCESSFUL AND ENORMOUS SALE. To do this, which at the outset of our plans seemed impossible, our buyers on the last two or three trips to the markets among manufacturers and jobbers, and with cash down, have been able to secure an enormous amount of new merchandise at a tremendous loss to the manufacturers or importers.

We are positive we have the merchandise and values EQUAL but to GO AHEAD of last year's sale.

Hundreds of lots—thousands of BARGAINS in NEW GOODS at PRICES EVEN LOWER THAN IN THE BUTLER SALE.

Mutterzolb and Son—By D. Darby Aaronson

"I [illegible] myself at [illegible] forget [illegible] fore I [illegible] did you [illegible] the front of the [illegible] I wuz [illegible] Could anything [illegible] worse [illegible] own son mixing [illegible] my business? I [illegible] already in business [illegible] membr[illegible] well, since the [illegible] went in it and never before did I have anybody tell me my business [illegible] to [illegible] I wuz overcharging [illegible] my business.

If I tell a buyer [illegible] me it ain't the price [illegible] it's the respect, and [illegible] more respect I get.

"But when you tell me in the front [illegible] that I am overcharging him, then you could be sure that he will pay men much less respect, and if I can't have the highest respect from my customers it [illegible]

"How many times [illegible] that in business always, if you must say something, it's better you should keep your mouth shut. And if a father is telling you this, you should not only obey him, but you should do it, too.

"I ask you why did you done such a thing? Shut up. Don't dare to interrupt me when I ask you a question. And to know yet what a loafer we got in the family, all I have to do is to count the gray hairs in my head

"You know I made terrible a mistake in you altogether. For twenty-five years I wuz thinking all the time that I wuz the father of a son, but now I first finded out that I am the father of a Jakeass.

"Supposing I already overcharging a buyer two dollars a dozen on a two-dozen order, what is that? You should remembering the old saying what says it, 'Honor your father and your days will be long,' and if you tell a buyer I am overcharging him two dollars a dozen too much, is that honor for me? And ain't you got more sense as for four dollars to shorten your days? Believe me, Milton, your days will not be much longer in this shop. Tell me, mouth talker, I ask you Tell me how much will you take for a week to stay away for a year? But remember, don't overcharging me, or you'll lose your best customer

"When you said the words I am overcharging, it wuz like if a knife would give me a cut. It only goes to show you that there is so much difference between me and you that the night is daytime Maybe it's true what your bum[illegible] you are a good 'mixer'; [illegible] I don't know, but I give [illegible] you could mix what [illegible] in my business

[illegible] you are [illegible] Yes. You are [illegible] mixer that [illegible] and that wuz a [illegible] Nickelodian Bonapart [illegible] Nickelodian Bonapart [illegible] in the mor[illegible] And right after [illegible] Maria and [illegible] to [illegible] Josephine [illegible] wuz so busy mixing in other country's business and fighting mit people he didn't know that he didn't have time for marriaging. So he tended to his marriage life by mail order business [illegible] so busy mixing. I'll bet mit you it costed him enough for stamps.

"Any-way, this Nickelodian Bonapart, he wanted to be the champion mixer from the whole world and that wuz where he maked the biggest mistakes. The biggest one that feller made wuz when he went mit his gang of big green doors to fight Moscowitz in Russia It wuz in the middle of the Winter when it wuz colder as anything and that chomma cup had to march himself away from France, where it wuz nice and warm, and for what? To give Moscowitz a downfall Well, maybe Moscowitz wuz overcharging him or he wuz overcharging Moscowitz, this nobody knows, but anyway before Nickelodian could give a mix in mit Russia, he wuz surrounded mit Russians and Winter, and if Bonapart wuzn't a good runner away they would surely killed him to dead.

"After this he went back to Parrots, where right away they gived him a catch for a prisoner, and bringed him to the Ireland of Elbow. Here they gived him a good home for himself mit plenty of eat and drink, and for nothing too, but do you think yet it made him satisfy? No, sir There wuz nobody there whose business he could mix in to, so he wuz commencing to feel very lonesome; so what does he do but mixes mit the night watchman's business and gives him maybe a few cents and even mit this the watchman didn't like that he should have somebody to mixing in his business, so he gived him an escape.

"And the minute what Nickelodeon camed back he right away got together mit his old gang and commenced to fight a bottle by the name of Waterlulu And the way they wuz fighting mit [illegible] wuz something terrible Nickelodeon's gang wuz fighting A No. 1, because on the other side wuz a sick Duke. But the Duke of Wellagin [illegible] mans started to [illegible] and they [illegible] ral from Germany [illegible] Bonapart [illegible]

"In them days just like today the Germans knowed more about bottles [illegible] and quick [illegible] fighting from him [illegible] a catch for a prisoner again

"And it wuz in the year something [illegible] died in Ireland from Saint Helena. I don't know what kind sickness is this, but that wuz the ending of Nickelodeon for the last time. And what did [illegible] Two wifes and a lot [illegible]

"So you see what he got from mixing into other people's business, especial yet in Russia, where he got it worster as all. And that's the way you'll get it from me. So look out that you don't mixing into my business no more, or I'll yet be a Russia for you. Explain me at least why you done such a thing."

"Well, to be perfectly frank," said Milton, "that fellow wasn't a buyer at all. He represents a talking picture concern. He thought you would make a good subject for a picture, and he persuaded me to engage you into a conversation. And as for my saying you overcharged him, that was merely the part I was playing. So you see I had a purpose in doing what I did He gave me a hundred dollars and I am going to divide it, fifty for you and fifty for me."

"You know, Milton," said Mutterzolb, "it's good to make sometimes a little theatre too, because it's relieving the mind a little I wuz acting good, ain't it, Milton?"

"You certainly did, father, you did it great. By the way, here's that $100, it's all in one bill. You take it and give me my fifty."

"How you want it, Milton," asked Mutterzolb, "in fives, tens, or what? Milton, I don't see no fives or tens in my pocketbook Quick, see where is it that feller what makes pictures to talk. He's got fives and tens"

"Why, father, I don't see him anywhere He must have gone."

"Gone! So is my brown overcoat mit $500."

Laughs from Andy Rice

in His New Vaudeville Sketch, "Rice and Old Shoes."

I'M a benedict. I don't know what a benedict is, but in Webster's Directory it says, "A benedict is a groom." And in another page it says, "A groom is a man who takes care of animals And I guess that's what I am I've been married a year now, and I can't make up my mind what kind of an animal my wife is.

You [illegible] tonight is the first anniversary of my wedding Tonight will be a year [illegible] I took unto my [illegible] for my better half You know I come near pretty near forgetting, but this morning my wife said

"Of course you're going to invite your friends up [illegible], ain't it?"

And I said "For what?" She said, "For the celebration" I said "What are we going to celebrate?" She said, "Tonight we are a year married" I said, "That ain't a celebration It's a post mortem"

And right away she got mad. For nothing! She said I should at least take her to a show. I said, "All right. What you want to see?" She said, "Let's see something appropriate for a year of married life." So I bought two tickets for "The Fight."

You know, my wife is a sort of romantic creature. She still clings to her youthful fancies. She's got a pretty good memory—that woman.

She tells me, "Andy, you ain't no more a lover. You don't bring me home a box of candy, a bunch of flowers Everything is cut and dried mit you. I admit you provide for me beautiful. But it's the little things that count with a woman. Money is nothing. On a day like this a bouquet of violets would make me happy."

And I had just made up my mind to give her fifty dollars, but when a man can make a woman happy for fifty cents—why be stubborn?

But I must give her credit. My wife is a very sensible woman. The day after the wedding we talked things over and she told me. She said "Now that we're married, I want you to feel easy. I want you to understand that I'm not the kind of a woman that interferes with a man's pleasure. I will never dictate—bachelor enjoyments A man must be free in his own house"

And I told her, "My greatest pleasure is smoking"

And she said, "All right, smoke as much as you please. Of course I wouldn't let you smoke cigarettes—that isn't manly; cheap cigars I couldn't stand, and good ones you can't afford—and a pipe makes too much dirt in the house. Anything else you can smoke."

I ask you, who couldn't get along with a woman like that?

You see what a smart woman she is—because if she tried to make me stop from smoking in the house it would have been a fight. And that's how she keeps peace in the family.

She lets me have my own way For instance, she said to me, "I want you to keep all your bachelor friends They're always welcome. Bring 'em up to the house any time—as long as they're respectable . . . but remember . . . I know the kind of a gang you run with—so don't try to bring any of those bums in my house"

You know it was right then that I come to the conclusion that connubial velocity wasn't what it's scratched up to be It teached me a lesson. A lesson that every young man must got to learn Never marry for money. It's a terrible thing to marry a woman for money. I know—because I married a woman for money—and I didn't get it

INSTRUCTIONS FOR USING COLORS

Unless you have a separate brush for each color, be careful to wash out the brush in clean water before using a fresh color. In painting it is best [illegible] on one side of the picture and work down or across, and it is best to cover the large surfaces first and then carry out the details of the picture later.

If the color when dry is not dark enough you may paint over again with the same color, and it is well to have a piece of blotter at hand so that if any mistake is made or a color is used in the wrong place, it can be absorbed by the use of the blotter. To secure delicate tints in portions such as sky, etc., it is a good plan to have a small piece of cotton [illegible] will give the delicate shades desired. In cases where very dark shades are necessary a little pure color can be taken from [illegible] with a moist brush. To secure flesh color, mix orange and red.

Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp

SCENE—Aladdin on the Way to the Cave with His "Uncle" to Get the Lamp.

ABANAZAR—Come along, boy. What's the matter with you? Are you afraid?

ALADDIN—Afraid? No, but I'm tired of this wild goose chase. Where is the cave you say contains the treasure?

ABANAZAR—Come with me and I will show you. And when you reach the mouth of the cave descend the steps, until you reach the floor below. The treasure is guarded by demons, but this ring (gives ring to Aladdin) will protect you from them. Get first a lamp which you will find burning there, and give it to me, and then possess yourself of the treasure at your leisure!

ALADDIN—But why don't you go yourself?—and what do you want of the lamp. I don't understand——

ABANAZAR—Fool! Waste no time in talking! Let midnight sound and the cave will close not to reopen at my bidding for a hundred years. Make haste, I say!

(Lights out—scene changes. Aladdin is alone in the cave.)

ALADDIN [illegible] though every [illegible] a gruesome place where [illegible] wonderful lamp. (Looks about and sees, at at the bottom of the avenue.) Ay! there it is; now then, I must take it down, extinguish the light, and put it in my bosom. I wonder what he can want with the shabby thing?

ABAN (from the top) Aladdin!

ALADDIN Here, uncle; here!

ABAN Have you got the lamp

ALADDIN I have

ABAN (eagerly) Bring it to me

ALADDIN (aside)—Not till I am safe above ground again.

ABAN—Bring me the lamp, I say!

ALADDIN—I will; but first lend me your hand to assist me in getting out of the cavern

ABAN—The lamp!

ALADDIN—First help me out, I say!

ABAN—I command you to give me the lamp this instant or

ALADDIN—I am, loaded, and cannot get at it till I am out of this place

ABAN—Wretch, for thy obstinacy thou diest! (Noise and struggle is heard from the top.) Base traitor! Dost thou dare to espouse my will? Thou shalt share his fate—this cavern shall entomb thee both forever!

(Noise at the top. Abenazar throws Kazrac into the cave, and the stone rolls over the entrance.)

ALADDIN Oh! cruel fate, to be buried alive! Oh, Aladdin! Aladdin! and art thou never to see the light of heaven again? And thou, too, poor, dumb, faithful Kazrac, must suffer for thy love to me! Is there no means, then—no hope—and to die? Shall I call for help?

(Kazrac, as if a sudden thought strikes him, points to the ring and tells him to rub it. The GENII OF THE RING rises.)

SLAVE OF THE RING—The Slave of the Ring, fair youth, at your command. You need but to command and I obey

ALADDIN—This is too easy. My uncle wasn't such a fool as he looked. More powerful than any Emperor, he said. Aladdin, your star is in the ascendant! Still, I think I shall be more comfortable when I see home and mother again

SLAVE—Fear not, to him who wears the ring no ill can come. The ring you wear is charmed. When it is rubbed, I must appear and execute whatever order you may give.

ALADDIN—I must be going crazy. Do you mean to say, without any jollying, that all I've got to do is to rub this piece of jewelry and you'll turn up wherever I am and do whatever I say?

SLAVE—Three times within each twenty four of earthly hours I must appear to do thy bidding

ALADDIN—Well, if this isn't a cinch I'm a dutchman. Then, if I tell you to get me out of this tomb back to my [illegible] you'll do it?

(The [illegible] agrees to Aladdin's home. They [illegible] them about his adventures.)

New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and Pittsburgh the Contenders, Says Philly Manager.

DETROIT, Jan. 3.—Four clubs will be very much in the fight for the National League pennant next season, in the opinion of Charles S. Dooin, manager of the Philadelphia team.

Dooin believes that the 1914 race [illegible] New York [illegible] Chicago and Pittsburgh [illegible] contenders. He also thinks that Brooklyn and Boston will [illegible] trouble for the leaders though not themselves flag possibilities. Testimony that Captain John A. Fish of New York paid $1,500 for his yacht Senta which he insured for $1[illegible]000 was given today in the trial of Fish in the Federal District Court. Fish is accused of burning he yacht off Martha's Vineyard three years ago. The case was adjourned until Tuesday morning.

FEW PLAYING MANAGERS IN BIG LEAGUES

Only Five, Including Two Doubtful, Remain in the American and National.

How many more years before the playing managers will be entirely out of existence in the major leagues? Next season there will be just two playing leaders in the American League, while there will be about three or four in the National.

Not so many years ago this was entirely changed. Most of the managers for ball clubs took active part [illegible] at the present [illegible] Joe [illegible] and Bill [illegible] the Red Sox will be playing [illegible] great number of games, while Birmy also may be kept on the bench owing to a bad leg.

SHY ON PLAYING LEADERS.

If this is the case, there will be no playing leaders in the A. L. Frank Chance and Jimmy Callahan, not so long ago, were playing managers, but retired in 1913, and there is hardly a chance they will return in 1914.

This is altogether different from the start in 1913, when George Stovall, Jake Stahl, Joe Birmingham, Jimmy Callahan and Frank Chance were the playing leaders. But times [illegible] the national pastime is no exception to the rule.

It will be [illegible] in the senior body. There were four playing leaders [illegible] which will be presided over by Governor Tener of Pennsylvania, while in all [illegible] there will be a like total during 1914.

Those who took active part on the [illegible] Miller Huggins of the Cardinals, Johnny Evers, Cubs, Joe Tinker, Reds, and Charley Dooin, Phillies. At that the latter did not play so [illegible] regular [illegible] Bill Killifer, the former Brownie, do most of the catching.

HOW MANAGERS WILL LINE UP.

Unless the unforeseen happens, Miller Huggins, Johnny Evers and Charley Dooin will again manage from the field in 1914, while the Cincinnati club has secured Herzog to take Tinker's place.

Maynard to Have Basketball Team

MAYNARD, Jan. 3.—This town is to be represented with a fast basketball five this Winter, according to all indications, and the club's season will probably open next Saturday evening, when the local quintet journeys to Northboro to play the team in that town.

John Panch [illegible] of Maynard's first basketball team hopes to be able to arrange the seating capacity of the Naylor Hall so that home games may be played. When the five was first organized, it was stated no home games would be played because of the fact that there was no suitable hall with a large enough space to raise an audience big enough to make the undertaking a paying proposition.

[illegible] of the Yankees, who stared [illegible] camp in Bermuda last [illegible] with the Jersey City Skeeters [illegible] McGraw has found [illegible] for the Giants when they go to Marlin, Tex., next Spring. Joe Kelley, manager of the Toronto International League Club and a close friend of the manager of the Giants, has accepted an invitation to take the Maple Leafs to Marlin Springs next March. The plan undoubtedly will prove beneficial to both teams. It will cut down the training expenses somewhat, and, besides, will give McGraw an opportunity to look over the promising players of the Toronto team, of whom he probably will get first choice.

18-YEAR-OLD GIANT LATEST SCULL WONDER

Henry Heller, 6 Feet 2 Inches, Promises to Become Leading Oarsman Next Summer.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—A new sculling wonder has been unearthed on the Harlem River, and, if the wise acres are to be credited, he will be the real boating sensation of 1914. The name of the "find" is Henry Heller, a member of the Metropolitan Rowing Club.

Although he has only been working in a racing shell about four months, Heller is now able to take the measure of all the seniors on the river.

Word was passed this Fall that the "Mets" had a lad who could make his shell travel as if it were propelled by motor, and immediately the old-timers and some of the new speed experts waited for Heller when he came paddling up-stream to have a brush with him.

All met the same fate, for Heller would draw ahead, after a mile or so had been covered.

The first man to get a line on Heller was Commodore John O'Reagan, of the "Mets," an ex-champion and a man of twenty years experience with the sculls. He had seen no man in years who could make his shell travel between strokes like young Heller.

There was no hiatus, as it were, between the reach for the stroke and the pull through the water. This one point is the one great secret of getting the speed out of the sculling boat. Right on the spot O'Reagan predicted that Heller would be the champion of America before he was well out of his teens.

SCHULTZ COACHES YOUNGSTER.

The youngster was taken in tow by John Schultz, coach of the Metropolitans, who imparted all the knowledge he had to the tyro.

Schultz says there will be nothing to beat Heller next year, and that he will be a cinch for the junior events carrying the red and black of the Metropolitans.

Schultz is going to devote all his time to the development of Heller and, if the weather permits, the pair are going to row all Winter.

Although Heller is only eighteen years of age, he towers six feet two inches. It was an ambition to gain weight and incidentally, more strength, that made him take to sculling.

Last Spring he weighed 14[illegible] pounds. Then he purchased a shell and decided to stick to rowing. He had about a month's previous work in a skiff, and he easily mastered the intricacies of sitting in the shell.

Heller works for his father at a factory in the Bronx, but he found time every afternoon to come to the Harlem River for a spin of a couple of miles. Every day he went out he found himself getting stronger, and gaining weight. In three months he gained twenty pounds.

NATURAL BORN SCULLER.

Old oarsmen along the Harlem say they have not seen such a natural born sculler in the last generation.

The majority of scullers spend the best part of their lives in trying to get the knack of making the boat travel without stopping between strokes, yet here is a young man who can steer an even keel, and do this after only a few months of pulling.

Of course Heller's reach and the leverage at his command help him in recovering for the reach forward to grip the water.

All he has to do is to drop his hands slightly and the sculls come out of the water, and he needs but shoot them out a little when the sculls go forward for the stroke.

Heller will be an entry in the first junior sculling race of 1914, be it on the Schuylkill or on the Harlem River.

OUR PRELIMINARY SALE OF UNDERMUSLINS OCCURRED LAST MONDAY

NOW COMES OUR GREAT

JANUARY SALE OF UNDERMUSLINS

A CARD

We claim better-made MUSLIN UNDERWEAR—prettier, neater styles and REGULAR—not hurriedly, carelessly made "sales goods."

Not the "showiest" MUSLIN UNDERWEAR—no, indeed. We guard our stock against the jumble of common products, put together for effect only.

Dainty, refined garments here that you like better and better as your examination of them becomes more thorough.

WHY SELL AT LOWERED PRICES?

Because—

The manufacturers make liberal concessions and we narrow our own margin in order to compass an immense volume of business.

That's the SHEPARD method, and it is justified by results.

Thrifty women will see the economy of selecting large quantities of Muslin Underwear before this Sale ends.

Everything that can be done without lowering our standard of quality has been done to make buying easy so far as prices and facilities are concerned.

Columbia Investment & Real Estate Company

TEN YEAR GOLD BOND

The Columbia Investment & Real Estate Company has for many years operated with uninterrupted success in the New York real estate field, its business having been confined to the development and sale of real estate, both improved and unimproved.

Its property holdings are located in Manhattan, Staten Island, Mount Vernon, Grantwood, Morsemere, Edgewater and Hudson Heights.

Grantwood is perhaps more closely associated with the Company's operations than any of its other properties. During the past ten years it sprung from a hamlet to a suburb of over two thousand inhabitants. The same progress is shown at Morsemere and at Hudson Heights.

The Company's operations have been conducted in a manner satisfactory not only to its stockholders, but as well to all who have had dealings with it—to the many who have purchased its improved properties and participated in the steady appreciation of values, as well as to those who have held its obligations.

Almost unlimited opportunity is offered for further advancement along the same highly successful and conservative policies followed by this Company in the past. Millions of dollars are being expended toward the betterment of transportation facilities in order that railroads and transportation lines may keep pace with the rapid growth of our suburban communities. Of the four tunnels under the Hudson River one is now in active operation, and the others are fast approaching completion. The bridging of the Hudson from Manhattan to the Palisades, with the other improvements referred to, will directly benefit the properties of this Company and afford it opportunities for even greater progress in the future.

Owing to the constant acquirement of new properties and the development of these properties, the Company is warranted in continuing to offer to the public its bonds, which guarantee 6% per annum income as well as prompt payment of the invested funds when due.

The Company's Coupon Bonds are direct obligations chargeable against its entire assets of over $2,850,000, including capital and surplus of nearly $300,000.

They guarantee 6% per annum interest, payable semi-annually by coupons attached.

They provide for withdrawal in full without loss of interest at any time after three years from date of issue on any interest payment date, six months' advance notice being required.

They are issued in denominations of $100, $250, $500 and $1,000.

The security protecting these bonds does not fluctuate and is not subject to manipulation and depreciation; nor is it affected by panics or depressions. It is based on real estate in New York City and vicinity, and from records of the past and present we have the unqualified assurance that no matter what conditions may arise, realty values in New York and its rapidly growing suburbs will increase and continue to increase to a greater and greater extent each year proportionate with the steady increase of population, now estimated at from 150,000 to 200,000 per year. It is not surprising, therefore, that well located real estate in and near New York City should be regarded as the most satisfactory basis of security.

The Satisfactory Investment

is a matter of interest to every conservative investor. We therefore submit for your consideration these 6% Full-paid Coupon Bonds. They assure unquestioned security and prompt payment of a fair income.

We solicit your patronage. Whether your initial investment be one hundred dollars or five thousand dollars, we are confident that after becoming acquainted with the non-speculative character of these 6% Bonds, you will find in them all the essentials of the ideal investment, one which will afford you uniform satisfaction and assurance of safety, both in times of depression and prosperity—an investment that guarantees the payment of 6% per annum interest and places the principal under your control at any time after three years.

The payment of these Bonds, both principal and interest, is guaranteed by the steadily increasing resources of the Company. The basis of security is real estate located in or near Greater New York—the one security that under any and all conditions shows steady appreciation in values. These Bonds have satisfactorily solved the problem of investment for many. We hope to serve you.

Further information with prospectus describing our properties will be promptly forwarded upon request.

"These bonds have satisfactorily solved the problem of investment for many—we hope to serve you."
"Unquestioned security and prompt payment of a fair income."

Now, wouldn't you think that these ten-year gold bonds of the Columbia Real Estate Company were non-bustable, with an array of gilt-edged safety appliances and promises as quoted above?

What happened? Well, after the milking was nicely done somebody tipped over the bucket and all was lost.

Two thousand seven hundred unfortunates who own these fine gold bonds realize now how empty were the promises, how worthless the beautifully engraved piece of paper, for they have lost over $1,250,000.

With all this security, the receiver, working indefatigably for one year and three months, can only return them 5 per cent. of their original investment—the balance (95 per cent.) is lost forever.

The moral to be pointed by this lesson, as with others before and still others to follow, is: Don't buy real estate bonds, stocks or profit-sharing certificates in New York without first submitting the proposition to a reputable lawyer, who for a small fee will advise you and save perhaps all that you have.

Buy real estate acreage or lots the same way, and tell your friends to do likewise. This course is absolutely essential to your interest until the State of New York offers you reasonable protection in the supervision of companies dealing in real estate securities and licensing real estate companies.

If a State board of supervision existed in New York and companies like the Columbia and all others offering real estate securities for sale were compelled by law to have their printed matter approved by such a board, 75 per cent. of the fake real estate bond selling would stop tomorrow.

NEW YORK REAL ESTATE SWINDLE IS UNCOVERED

with such information as I can in connection with the defunct Columbia Real Estate Company.

At the date of the appointment of the receiver the total liabilities of the company, which included unsecured bonds, bonds secured by mortgages, guaranteed mortgages and all other liabilities, was a little over $2,900,000. Of this total something over $1,800,000 was represented by mortgages, which, in the case of the Industrial Savings and Loan Association and the New York Mortgage Company, now in the hands of the Banking Department of New York in liquidation, had interest unpaid thereon for periods ranging from a year to two years. The taxes on practically all of the property were in arrears for two years. The liabilities, exclusive of the mortgages, amounted in round figures to over two million dollars. The claims actually filed with me as receiver aggregate in round figures about $1,900,000. Of this amount $190,000 are claims filed by stockholders. These are, in almost every instance, very poor people, who can ill afford to lose the money, and who, of course, will not receive one cent on their investment.

The bondholders and general creditors number about twenty-seven hundred persons and are scattered all over the Eastern States, and some as far West as California. If we take the bondholders alone, you can readily see that a dividend of two per cent would pay them about $26,000 on their $1,300,000 of claims. If I am very fortunate with the property I may possibly pay three per cent. more dividend, which would give the bondholders about $39,000, or a total in all of about $65,000 on an investment in actual cash of over $1,300,000 not taking into account the large item of interest accruing since July 1, 1912, the date of my appointment. The checks to the creditors for two per cent. dividend have just been mailed.

An examination of the methods of this company indicate that there were four different ways in which the public was invited to invest in the company's holdings.

The first was by buying stock, which was sold as high as $85 a share.

The second was by buying the bonds of the company. There were many different issues known as gold bonds, accumulated bonds, coupon bonds, etc., etc. They were not a lien on anything, simply an obligation of the company.

The third method was to buy land on the instalment plan.

The fourth was to invest in mortgages on land of the company, which mortgages were guaranteed by the company.

As far as I can learn there was no supervision by any Federal or State authorities in any way investigating or regulating the issuing of these different securities. The stockholders, when they purchased stock, signed a proxy to the officers to vote, and of course, they could perpetuate themselves in office.

I sincerely hope that the net result of the present agitation of this subject will be that some carefully drawn law will be enacted which will not only protect the innocent investor, but will also insure to the benefit of the well-managed realty companies.

W. J. McDonald, a prominent broker:

The prospects for Boston real estate for 1914 are brighter and better than they have been for the last twenty-five years.

The conservative investor has decided that the safest place to invest funds is in first-class real estate. Therefore, with the enormous increase in real estate valuations and population that is bound to occur in Metropolitan Boston during the next five years, real estate is the one best investment for safety as well as future profits.

The great increases in population and [illegible] are due to the united efforts of the Chamber of Commerce, the real estate exchanges and other organizations. The development of the Port of Boston has induced many new business enterprises to locate in Metropolitan Boston.

I have had more inquiries from large manufacturers at present located outside of New England for suitable locations in or near Boston than at any time in the last fifteen years. Many of these employ thousands of hands. Inquiries of this kind are new as well as encouraging.

People having money to invest should loan on first mortgages and on well located real estate. There has been no depreciations in the last ten years in first-class mortgages, while many of the leading stocks and bonds have depreciated from 10 to 75 per cent.

New England investors should beware of securities offered for sale, such as wildcat mining stocks. Also a word in relation to many real estate stocks offered. These should be carefully investigated, for in many cases they are sold merely for the benefit of the promoter, and when you have parted with your good money, all you have is a well-printed certificate for a souvenir.

REPLY TO MR. MORIARTY.

I have had considerable experience with strikes, both as Governor and as employer. I narrated a few of my experiences in the Boston AMERICAN of the date of October 28. And I am glad of this opportunity to state publicly, that so far at least as one of the men involved is concerned, viz: Mr. Moriarty, the statements then made were based on erroneous information, and I now retract them.

My argument and statements, so far as Mr. Moriarty is concerned, were based upon the information that Mr. Moriarty, following the incident of the Sturtevant strike, had been a candidate for re-election as president of the Central Labor Union and upon the assumption that his attitude in regard to the strike, in so far as I in any way associated him with the strike in the article referred to, was dictated by political motives.

Apparently, the Boston & Maine is the property that has suffered most, and it is this property that will be helped most by being put ... given independent ... connections to New York ... Whatever we can do to help build it up will benefit the whole of New England.

The New Haven never produced those metropolitan betterments that ... promised. But the money ... spent on Rhode Island ... would have ... providing ... would have paid ... That's another reason why I demanded more powerful public supervision of railroad finances and operation, not only by Massachusetts, but through closer co-operation between all the New England States.

GREAT FUTURE OF THE PORT

The Commonwealth has already made a splendid start toward our commercial development, through the work of the Directors of the Port of Boston. They have secured for Boston the business of many of the most important trans-Atlantic lines, and are rapidly restoring Boston as a great seaport.

This development, which came largely from my personal efforts and demands, is a matter in which I take a great deal of satisfaction. We are now assured of a commercial future for Boston. And because Boston is the commercial centre for all New England, this entire region will benefit by the result.

Every property owner, every business man, in fact every resident in New England, has a vital stake in the business future of our section. But until we asserted the rights of Boston to its own commercial development this entire section was being drained for the benefit of New York and other ports dominated by trunk line influences.

We must complete our metropolitan equipment by connecting our rail and water terminals together, connecting the North and South Stations and building up a modern metropolitan system of freight and passenger facilities.

We must have all roads entering the metropolitan area electrified, and we must have uniform freight and passenger rates throughout this area.

The subsequent discovery that such was not the case leads me to retract, in this manner, the entire reference to Mr. Moriarty.

MUST PROTECT THE PUBLIC.

In the field of public service no personal considerations should be of any weight as against the chief problem of safeguarding the right of the public to uninterrupted service.

The conditions under which a franchise is given to a railroad or any other public carrier are such that the corporation becomes in effect the agents of the public; and both it and its employes owe to the public a duty which should be accorded a definite priority.

If the public is called upon to intervene, however, it must be on an absolutely dispassionate basis.

If the employes are to be given that official recognition implied, for example, by a license, they must recognize the right of the public to its public service.

If the railroads are not to be permitted to treat with their men as a private corporation treats with its men, or to compromise the question of an equitable wage by concessions that may prove financially disastrous in the future, then the roads in return must receive every equitable adjustment of rates which their business demands, so that the public, the employes and the stockholders may have, equally, that advantage which should follow if the present chaotic condition were to give way to a more definite understanding between all parties.

Secret Dungeons of the Tower of London Opened to Visitors

The Tower of London, the Secret Dungeons and Torture Chambers of Which Will Now Be Opened to the Public for the First Time.

THE British Government has decided to open the secret dungeons of the Tower of London to the public.

The scenes of the darkest tragedies in English history, of the most dreadful tortures inflicted by mediæval cruelty, will thus become accessible to the ordinary visitor for the first time.

Most American visitors to London go to the Tower. If they are observant they notice that the part to which they are admitted forms only an insignificant fraction of the whole group of buildings. Much will still remain closed to the public, for accommodation is needed for a regiment of soldiers and a small army of officials. But the government has decided that the most interesting, historically, of the closed portions shall be opened.

The old reason for keeping them closed was that they were so dark and gloomy, in many cases beneath the ground and river level, that it was difficult to guard them efficiently.

The Tower has been continuously in the occupation of British monarchs and governments for 835 years—i.e., since 1078, when its building was begun by William the Conqueror. Before this, it is believed, a Roman fortress called the "Arx Palatinum" was on

The Execution of Poor Lady Jane Grey in Her Seventeenth Year at the Tower of London, on February 15, 1554. structed here by Julius Cæsar. The Tower really includes twenty towers, but it derives its accepted name from the prominence of the large square tower in the centre.

The [illegible] old prison. It covers thirteen acres, and forms an independent [illegible] since is still maintained there [illegible] although it is never occupied by him. The most conspicuous evidence of its royal standing is the fact that the crown, regalia and crown jewels are kept there.

The Tower is the most interesting building in the world, because its history was crowded with dramatic events for so long a period. Its living history continued down to the middle of the eighteenth century, when the last of the romantic Jacobite rebels were beheaded there.

In the amazingly bloodthirsty annals of old English history the members of a defeated political party were [illegible] ried to the Tower and beheaded, with more or less haste on the Tower green or the adjacent Tower hill. In many cases they were subjected to hideous tortures in the underground dungeons.

Many of the bravest and best men and fairest women in England's history, as well as some of the worst, have perished in the Tower. The ferocity of the deeds committed seems almost incredible to modern minds. Lady Jane Grey, a beautiful and sweet-tempered girl of seventeen, was beheaded simply [illegible] a tool to keep Mary Tudor off the throne.

There is often a touch of humor in the old chronicles of loose drama. For instance, we are told that King Henry VIII engaged a very skilful Flemish executioner at great expense to chop off the head of his second wife, Anne Boleyn, because he was so fond of her!

Among the parts now to be opened are the

It received its present sanguinary name as long ago as [illegible] The [illegible] of [illegible] little [illegible] Tower [illegible] [illegible] or King Edward IV. This monster had [illegible] the older brother, the Duke of [illegible] drowning him in a butt of malmsey [illegible] the Tower.

One of the torture chambers to which the curious will be admitted is the one in which the bold Sir Thomas Wyat was [illegible] tried to take the Tower by storm was [illegible] tured in 1554. An old writer thus [illegible] this place:

From it [illegible] projected a [illegible] rope, terminated by [illegible] On the ground [illegible] an instrument [illegible] shaped saw with [illegible] steel [illegible] about three feet [illegible] At the other end [illegible] a pendulous weight [illegible] stocks. "A pound of macaroni gives you nearly twice as much food value as a pound of steak, at less than one-half the cost."

Should We EAT ONE ANOTHER?

A FRENCH physician, Dr. Hugeneq, of Lyons, has surprised the scientific world by advancing the theory that human flesh is the best food for mankind is man. He claims that human flesh is the most delicate and most nourishing food man can eat. Well-nourished, healthy beasts, he says, afford a coarser and stronger flesh, and carnivorous animals, of course, feed on the flesh of the lower animals.

There are many good reasons why this doctor's revolting idea is entirely wrong. In the first place, it is a matter of common knowledge that cannibal tribes are notoriously thin, hard and poorly nourished. Even when plentiful supplies of human flesh which they procure by battle are available, they prefer to live on flesh from other animals, which is quite different from human flesh. Human flesh is far from tender, cannot account for the lack of nourishment which is quite characteristic of this diet.

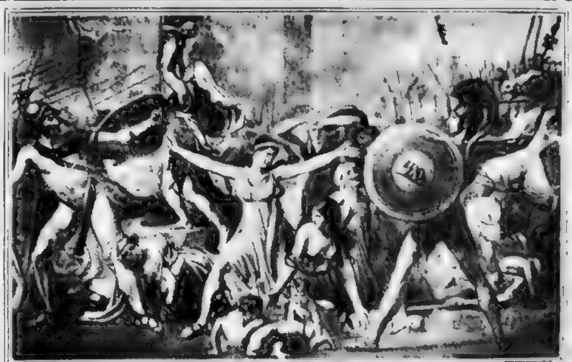
WHY SOME WOMEN LOVE BRUTES

The Amazing Letter of Mrs. Florence Folsom Laying Bare the Sordid Secrets of Her Heart Explained by the Teachings of Psychology ---By Prof. E. D. Rice, of Columbia University.

Mrs. Charles Dwight Folsom



The Abduction of the Sabine Women. From a Painting by J. L. David in the Louvre. A Historical Case of a Whole Tribe of Women Who Were Taken by Force and [illegible]

Mrs. Folsom's Remarkable Confessions to Her Husband

This letter was offered in evidence the other day in Mr. Folsom's divorce suit, and a verdict was promptly given him without further discussion.

February 27, [illegible]

Dear Dwight: I am stronger now and able to [illegible] you the [illegible] God I [illegible] The situation in Reno, of [illegible] of Charles and myself is terrible, tragic and frightful as can be [illegible]

I am writing this letter because I love our son, because I once loved you and because I love Gus Williams. He has treated me with crushing brutality. He has also treated me with the utmost kindness. Both are possible to him.

You will hear him described as worthless, a liar, a [illegible]. He is weak in many ways, which showed in his allowing his mother to revile and abuse me. On Monday, February 11, I endured in his presence without defence or protection from him, in spite of his solemn promises, the cruelest and fiercest ill treatment I have ever suffered. But I must have deserved it all.

Up to the time I met Gus Williams, on January 10, Charles and I led an innocent and decent life. We went each evening to the moving pictures. I was lonely and unhappy of course. Except for Charles I lived the life of a recluse.

Gus Williams sought me out because of a chance word of mine heard by him on the street. He was kinder to me than any one has ever been. I did not love him at first. I was merely contented and happy with him. He took me long drives. He is as much a lover of horses as I. He knows nothing but horses. His whole life has been spent with them, as jockey, trainer and breeder.

You will consider him coarse and illiterate. He is that. He cannot write intelligibly. One of the cruel things—unconsciously cruel, I see now—was to make me write an affectionate letter to his wife to induce her to do him a business favor. He is a man in whom good and evil are strangely blended. I loved him in every way. I never loved you one-tenth as well, nor any other. He is my natural mate.

I have suffered hell at his hands, but I shall say no further ill of him. The cruelty he has inflicted was mostly unconscious, and he had nursed me like a mother many a night, tears rolling down his cheeks because of my pain. I never meant to be his mistress. I meant only to be his friend.

Gus was with me constantly from January 16 to February 10. Angered by certain rough and coarse acts and by his making me write that letter to his wife, I parted from him in a seathing note on February 10. All that night he rode, maddened. All that night I lay awake and suffered.

In the morning I went to his house, meaning to tell him I understood better his offences to me and that against his kindness, nursing and tending me in hysterical and bodily illness I counted them as little. My letter had infuriated him and he had spoken of me to his mother in such a way as to inflame her.

My sins against you, some of them at least, I expiated on that frightful morning. It drove me quite mad. The mother took away the dog that Gus had given me—a magnificent collie, the most lovable and tender creature I ever knew. Gus let her, and was brutal to me in other ways. I came home broken in brain.

All my nights in Reno except those spent with Gus, and many of those, too, have been nights of tears, anguish, agony and remorse. He has had to stroke my head for hours. Nothing has ever soothed me half as much. I have deserved it all, but my punishment is more than I can bear. I do not know at what moment the officers may come and take Charles. I have not slept or eaten hardly since the 10th. Nothing but the fresh air I get every day driving has kept me alive or as sane as I am. The horse I have had is the one thing that has saved my reason and Charles's health.

We may as well face the brutal facts. You were too much of a gentleman for me. Brutality is necessary for my control. This man has it. Imperfect as he is, he is better suited to guide and control me than any one else I ever knew.

My mental incapacity, worldly ignorance and my folly and helplessness generally appeal to the best in him. His wife is a strong, able woman, well able to take care of herself. They are to be divorced very soon.

If she names me as corespondent no divorce can be obtained for me or by me in Reno. I suppose you could sue against me as a Nevada resident. I am willing to stay and finish my residence here if you so decide. You can sue me even if I have lost the right to sue you.

No further offense against morality will be committed by me in my home here. Williams and I have postponed resumption of our life together until after his divorce and mine. He swears he means to be faithful to me. He says he had to be rough with me.

I can make no excuse for my conduct except that I am a very strange being, not like other people. I am not crazy, but very strange. I sincerely and earnestly believe he is the one human being who can control me. As his wife I shall have to endure rough language and usage—but I shall be happier than you made me, for Williams is a being of my own kind and species. You are not. May you find your mate and with less pain than I paid to find mine.

No one warned me against Gus when they saw me driving with him, and now every one blackens him to me. They say that his wife has supported him and his mother for over a year. Perhaps this may be true. I shall certainly suffer great hardships with him, I know that, but I believe in my soul he is the man God intended for me.

My head is now clear and I see the awful, ghastly, shocking ruin I have made of my life. I will plead no excuses. I am suffering the limit of my capacity. I thank you for letting me have Charles out here.

I have sinned in every way, betrayed your trust in me. Do what you will. I have told you the truth. I love Charles. I loved you and I love Gus, and I have bitterly and grievously injured you all. Asking your pardon is nothing. There is no more for me to say.

Psychology Explains Why Brutes Fascinate Women

By PROF. DAVID EDGAR RICE, PH. D., Columbia University.

THE recent movement for the so-called "emancipation of women" makes it pertinent to inquire whether women, as a sex and on the whole, really want to live on terms of perfect equality with men. Or is there, deep down in the hearts of many women, a feeling of satisfaction and complacency at the thought that they may have some one to whom they may look not only as a protector, but as a master as well?

Why do women love brutal husbands? It happens that psychology is able to answer this question—and further on we shall see what this science gives as the answer.

To such a question it is, of course, not to be expected that the response will be unanimous by those who are not students of psychology. On the one hand the champions of women's rights stoutly maintain that women "are, and of right ought to be, free and independent" beings. Their arguments are familiar and, let it be granted, perfectly convincing to any rational man or woman who may think argument necessary. The doctrine of the essential inferiority of women is merely one of the relics of primitive ages, entirely unfair and unjust in theory and most vicious in its practical application.

But, on the other hand, we must not lose sight of the fact that there are many intelligent [illegible] women whose situations in life are such that the question has little interest to them, and many other women, less intelligent perhaps, who deliberately accept the doctrine of inferiority, even though its application may bring to them the extreme of misery and unhappiness.

The apparent lack of sympathy of this great mass of women, it is recognized, constitutes a greater obstacle to the growth of the movement than the hostility of men. A recent sketch by Ella Wheeler Wilcox describes one of these women, who explains her point of view in the following words: "But love to me would be impossible unless the man kept my eyes lifted. I am glad I did not live in those days when lovers knelt to propose. I would prefer to be a cave woman and have my lover beat me down with a club and carry me away by force. The capture of the Sabine women by the Roman soldiers always fascinated me. [illegible]"

A striking example [illegible] is to be found in the remarkable confessions of Mrs. Florence Folsom, recently made public in connection with proceedings for divorce instituted by her husband and printed on this page today. This woman had for more than fifteen years lived an apparently normal and respectable life as the wife of a Jersey lawyer. Recently, [illegible] a separation was [illegible] to Nevada [illegible] ing application for divorce. Psychology understands Mrs. Folsom.

Shortly after her arrival in Reno she fell in with a Nevada ranchman and horse breeder of most unsavory reputation. A casual acquaintance ripened into intimacy, and the woman soon fell under the spell of a [illegible]

But that is not to be—not yet; and, I fear, not for some time still to come.

My reason for this reticence is the best reason any woman ever has had or ever will have to guard and to promote to the utmost within her power the best interests of the child she brings into the world.

The living personification of that reason is beside me as I am writing this chapter—three years after I landed at that unnamed European port with the fixed determination that he should be mine and mine only, and that I should not be hampered when a certain time of reckoning came.

As I write I can glory in his baby strength and beauty, and thank my stars that I have remained firm in my resolution that he should be mine.

I Have Won Independence for Us Both.

While he is still a baby innuendoes and denials cannot hurt him. The time is long past when they could hurt me.

I am doubly fortunate, doubly happy. I have my little son, and I have won independence for us both.

Even though Destiny should deny him other rights which were his at birth, he is safe. With continued health, the comparatively large amounts received from my work are assured for at least two years yet to come. It may interest you to know that all the surplus above the expenses of our appropriate way of living goes into the bank or into investments, for Russel Thaw, my baby.

Even so with these bright prospects, what right have I, by word or act, to hazard anything that is his by birthright? It is [illegible] to no one to look far into the future—but everyone is entitled with power to be silent.

Harry Thaw has escaped from his appointed prison. There is some uncertainty about the final disposition of his case. Possibly he may again be [illegible] to direct in person his affairs, his estate.

The Thaw family virtually, abandoned me before. I was able to shake them off, as well as shake off the thrall of my husband. Personally, I have nothing in common with any of them.

For the present my motto must be what that philosopher wrote to his master, the Pope of Rome, about his Holiness' powerful and troublesome kinsman, Caesar Borgia. "Molto solitario e secreto." I must stand alone, and where vital interest of my son are concerned, must keep my own counsel.

The explanation contained in this digression is something due to myself as well as to you. I can now go on with my story confident that you will understand the reason for and pardon a certain vagueness respecting exact [illegible]

Behold me, then, with my companion both still disguised and travelling under freshly assumed names, arrived at the [illegible] European city I have mentioned, and neither of us able to speak or understand a word of the native language of the country. But I had studied French at a Pittsburgh school of music and languages. Even an elementary command of the French language is useful in most European countries; so we managed to get along fairly well, though we had a perfect picnic with our trunks and other luggage.

The problem that confronted us now was to decide upon some place where we could establish ourselves for a few months and read natural, wholesome lives without risking the discovery of my identity.

I was reconciled to the necessity of living everywhere an assumed name, but I was determined to find some place where I could throw off my ridiculous disguise, the novelty of which had worn off, and enjoy my self-appointed exile in the character of the real Evelyn Thaw.

I am not going to plead that high-sounding but trite and hackneyed purpose, so much in vogue with women of "advanced" ideas similarly circumstanced, which is expressed in the phrase "pre-natal influences." I knew that that would take care of itself if I led a natural, out-of doors, contented existence, with "nothing on my mind but my hair."

Accordingly, our discussion of the big European cities was rather brief. Most large cities possess certain advantages of concealment which are lacking in small towns and villages. They were discarded for the same reason that I left New York and did not dream of going to Paris or London—the ubiquitous American tourist.

As nine-tenths of the multitude of Americans travelling abroad pursue the same well-beaten path from capital to capital, go from one esteemed Wonder of the World to the next one, year after year, rarely making excursions along obscure bypaths known only to the cultured and discriminating tourist, the solution was not so difficult after all. Some sylvan nook in the mountains; some Sleepy Hollow village, secluded from the faintest echoes of the great world and its affairs—that was the idea.

Oh, the quantity of guidebooks and maps we bought and studied and pored over! Armfuls of them! Some unheard-of village would look good to me, and I'd go to a tourist agency to inquire about it.

"How about So and So? Is the climate good?"

"The climate?" the polite clerk would repeat. "Oh, of a certainty the climate is excellent."

"And the food? Is there a variety of food, well cooked and served?"

"Oh, assuredly. So and So is quite famous with the natives for its milk and eggs, its cheeses and fowls and vegetables."

And then he would gaze into my absurd spectacles, take an inventory of my New Hampshire "schoolmarm" details, shrug his shoulders and add:

"But you wouldn't be satisfied there. No Americans are ever seen in the place."

Blessings on the fellow's innocent ignorance! Just in that way, after several visits, he solved our problem for us. We discovered a place "guaranteed against Americans!"

Bit by Bit I Drop My Disguise.

American reporters naturally follow the lead of other Americans—that's usually their business in Europe. I would be free of them—no headlines in the New York and Pittsburgh papers informing Harry and all the other Thaws about the details of "Evelyn's mysterious exile."

We journeyed to our hidden Eden.

It was a remote village buried among mountains. The distance from the city where we planned our campaign of exile was considerable—but that didn't matter. Besides, we would take the precaution of reaching it by a roundabout route, anyway.

We made the journey in a leisurely way, stopping over a day or two in each of half a dozen of the quaintest, most curious little towns and villages. And as we proceeded I began gradually to emerge from my "schoolmarm" chrysalis.

I "forgot" my dreadful umbrella in one place, my disfiguring spectacles in another. Those penciled lines disappeared from my face. The mud-colored veil was dropped in a roadside ditch. I gave my cheap tan duster to a peasant woman, who overwhelmed me with blessings; my unspeakable little brown hat went to another, who was quite overcome with gratitude.

We had some pretty frocks and hats and their accessories in our trunks, and at the last stop before reaching our destination we transformed ourselves into two rather attractive and up-to-date American young women travelling together in this way just for the fun of the adventure.

I don't suppose there's a spot in Central Europe where the independent habits of American women surprise or disconcert the natives in the least. That they are "American" settles everything—especially as Americans have the reputation of carrying plenty of ready money about with them. I thanked my stars for the ingenuity that had enabled me to continue in receipt of that seventy dollars a week from Harry Thaw.

One amusing feature of this gradual approach to our hiding place in the mountains was the lightning changes we made in our names and in the names of the American cities we hailed from. This we did to foil possible pursuit. Every time we reached a new village we had acquired entirely new names. I declare to goodness that more than once we got all tangled up over "aliases," which were sometimes taken from books and sometimes invented; in the latter case I think we beat all records in nomenclature combinations, representing every nationality under the sun. But it all "went" beautifully. For do not naturalized Americans come out of the greatest "melting pot" of polyglot raw material the world provides?

"And Presently Russell Thaw Was Born"

Oh, the charm of our quaint little mountain village, when we were settled and began to look about us! The simple kindliness of the villagers in their attentions to their unaccustomed guests, whose eccentricities all came under the head of "American!" That tourist agency clerk had been right. We met no other Americans during our whole stay—except once, when I had clambered to the top of a mountain at some distance from our own village.

Luckily they were entire strangers to me. Naturally, they were curious. But I was so apparently candid in my replies that they saw nothing mysterious about me. They were about to conclude their stay in another village, and I never saw them again.

During three whole months the life I led was simply idyllic. I had not a care in the world. Mind and memory seemed to slumber peacefully. The Thaws and the "Thaw Case" seemed only like occasional dark shadows cast out of another existence.

The whole experience served my great purpose in really an ideal manner. The scenery was so charming. The climate—marvelous! So mild—such exquisite mornings, such glorious days, such magnificent sunsets!

There were many wonderful mountain streams and waterfalls and pretty little brooks. All day long I rambled along their banks and climbed the mountain slopes. I grew as strong and healthy as a young animal.

At the same time we had our social diversions. We dined at a long table with kindly natives all about us. I wore my prettiest frocks and amused myself dressing my hair in all sorts of fashions. Gradually I acquired some use of the language of the country, and, with convenient mixtures of easy French, was able to gratify my table companions with probably some of the weirdest tales of American life and customs every heard by a secluded European community.

We danced and sang and told stories—and then I would go to bed and sleep like the proverbial "top."

Along toward October my companion left me, to keep her stage engagement in America. Naturally I was distressed to have to part with her; but I had become so much a member of the whole village family that there wasn't a chance of my being lonely.

A few weeks later I packed up and went to the nearest city of any importance. It wasn't at all necessary, for I was in the best of hands and needed no more than the most primitive sort of care. But I chose to be on the safe side.

And, presently, in the city I have mentioned, Russell Thaw was born!

"My baby himself is the reason for my reticence now about all the circumstances of his birth. And my reason is the best any woman ever has had, or ever will have—to guard and to promote to the utmost within her power the best interests of the child she brings into the world."

"Whose baby are you mothering, Evelyn?"

I had to "hug myself" with delight and satisfaction. I had determined that my baby should be mine, and mine only. And right at home here in New York he was all the more mine because nobody who did recognize us, and saw us together, ever entertained the thought that I could be the baby's mother!

You will understand that all this time—until little Russell Thaw was nearly two years old—the only communication I had with Harry Thaw or his family, save in the most roundabout way, was through Dr. Sillo, in the shape of that seventy-dollars-a-week allowance check.

This was, of course, my sole means of livelihood, my only income. But we were able to live comfortably, even contentedly, on it. In the absence of harrassments by my creditors I could forget my resentment at the Thaws for their "forgetfulness" of the great obligations they were so free to acknowledge, and promise to repay, during the progress of the second trial, when my testimony was so necessary.

I could remember, with a smile, the solicitous remark of Mr. Delmas that I "held my husband's life in my hands." I could cheerfully remember the affectionate attentions of all the Thaws, their temporary generosity in the shape of dollars from the Thaw fortune, and their loving tributes of costly flowers.

I could afford to smile at these recollections, for I held in my arms, nursed at my breast, a present and future recompense for everything!

A Fresh Storm Threatens Me.

I was happy, and I knew that no one of the name of Thaw was at all happy. The Yarmouth connection had turned out a costly and glittering fiasco—as notorious a slap in the face as ever had been borne by a rich title-hunting American family.

Harry Thaw, rendered as nearly normal as he ever would be, by the wholesome life and discipline of Matteawan, was feeling more and more the loss of his liberty. His only comforting thought was his most egregious mistake—that he had prevented me from doing anything, that I was reconciled to slumbering unobtrusively in the shadow of his greatness.

There wasn't a doubt that other efforts would be made to obtain my husband's release—that thousands and thousands more of the Thaw fortune would be poured into the greedy hands of lawyers. It was becoming known that, great as the Thaw possessions were, they had more than once felt the strain of these huge drains in the shape of ready money. No; certainly the Thaws—any of them—were not enjoying themselves.

What would happen when I should lead forth Russell Thaw into the full light of day?

During this period of comparative quiescence respecting the "Thaw Case" there were still occasional rumblings in the newspapers. I read them with, perhaps, a little more interest than was felt by the average newspaper reader.

For example: Dr. Flint is reported as saying that Dr. May was appointed head of a lunacy commission in order to help Harry Thaw get out of the Matteawan Asylum. The venerable doctor is also quoted as accusing Superintendent Scott, of New York prisons, of being "in a plot to secure Thaw's release."

"Quite so," I remark to myself. "The leaven is working. There's going to be another 'insanity hearing.'"

A certain newspaper discovers that the "Thaw Case" after all, will not be without its benefit to humanity, since it has inspired Multi-millionaire Phipps, of Pittsburgh, to erect a million-dollar clinic at Johns Hopkins University.

I ask myself if all the antiseptics and disinfectants and prophylactics to be poured out in the whole career of a "million-dollar clinic" will ever banish the "Thaw Case" miasma from the public mind.

Newspaper reports of dissensions and strife between members of the Thaw family. Harry Thaw interviewed on the subject. He denies that he and his mother are at odds. Further more, the celebrated Matteawan prisoner says that Lawyer Hartridge lies when he states that "Thaw wrote a letter to Evelyn (Ha, ha! I'm remembered! Oh, joy!) telling her to stick to his mother because she had the funds."

Wait! Here I am again—several times!

I am discovered at Reno establishing a residence there for a purpose which "put Reno on the map" of the habitable globe. (In sober reality, I'm perambulating my baby up and down Riverside Drive.)

The interesting discovery is made that "Evelyn is going to marry a New York physician."

I'm off in the Northwest somewhere, buying a fine farm where Harry and I will live happily ever after. (Oh, wait, while I laugh!) Because all the time I'm generally nursing that delicious baby in my flat.

You'll excuse me—but this is my chapter. Let me have a thoroughly good time—while it lasts. For there is a small cloud appearing on the horizon—though I don't perceive it as yet—which presently will overspread the sky, and then!—but I anticipate.

There I was, happy, contented, laughing in the very face of Fate. That is a trait in my character—the ability to laugh in circumstances which cause most persons to groan and tear their hair—an endowment for which I shall be ever grateful.

Probably it was my having sounded the very depths of human bitterness and disaster that made the present contrast in my life so delightful. Consider the lives of all the women famous for infamous. If not [illegible] more monstrous ingratitude [illegible] sex I see little boys and girls in the families of friends who share my ideas running about unclothed without the slightest consciousness that they are doing anything suggestive. Their instinct is right. There is no wrong.

By Mme. Valentine de Saint Point

Shame was originally an invention of man to keep woman in subjection to her husband. She was taught that she must go clothed to safeguard her husband's exclusive privileges. She was taught this with a club. Then, in order to instill this convention very thoroughly into humanity, it was taught to the children as soon as they could understand. At a later stage of civilization it became the greatest bolster of the horrible sham system of morality under which we have suffered for nearly two thousand years.

We are now progressing to a new era of light in which we shall combine the old Greek ideals of bodily perfection without shame and modern ideals of science, hygiene and intellectuality. We see the signs of the change in the feminist movement, the unrest of women. We see it in the ever quickening leadership of science. The signs of the new era are on every hand. Why should we not recognize that with it is a new conception of what is really suggestive, indecent or obscene?

Women's fashions of today, so far as they reveal the figure without restraint or afterthought, are admirable. They are often healthful and beautiful. I have no mission to defend wild fantasies of fashion. But to attack any fashion because it reveals the human figure is stupid. The impropriety lies entirely in the mind that can conceive such criticisms.

The minds that are so steeped in darkness and barbarism that they hate the unadorned human body belong to the worst periods of the Middle Ages. They would delight in the use of the thumbscrew and the rack. To deface a human form would be a joy to them.

We French people have indeed never suffered from the dreadful Puritanism of England and America, which treated all joy and beauty as a crime. There are many Frenchmen who are without a false sense of shame. We have the heritage of Greek and Latin beauty.

But the minds of Frenchmen need also to be cleansed and turned toward high ideals. All things are not pure to them. Woman's figure is too often the subject of innuendo and misplaced mirth. This is not as it should be. A woman's figure should no more excite mirth than a beautiful sunset. It is my hope to make Frenchmen, even Parisians, look at beauty and nature with reverence.

There are two kinds of indecency—the indecency of Puritanism and the indecency of cynicism. I detest both of them equally.

Sex is not a thing to be ashamed of, but to be proud of. Nothing that God made can be wrong. There are signs that people are beginning to understand this in every country. The free discussion of sex matters is the most hopeful sign of our day. When we talk of these things with no more shame than a baby feels at its nakedness we shall have reached perfection. That is what I am striving for.

There ought to be no shame in art or literature. All language that is necessary for the expression of an intelligent idea is proper. It is monstrous that truth or beauty should be muffled in order to satisfy the ideas of those who are looking for evil in both. Their ideas should be changed, not the creations of art.

I do not imagine that I pose as the discoverer of human nudity. Others have had the inspiration even in the darkest days. My grandfather told me a very interesting story of the court of the Second Empire. The Emperor Napoleon III [illegible] people remember, a very beautiful favorite, named Countess de Castiglione. Without much consideration for the [illegible] Emperor [illegible] appeared at a [illegible] ball at the [illegible] dressed only in a cloak of [illegible].

[illegible] back to [illegible] had the [illegible] cloak from [illegible] the [illegible] Emperor [illegible] made [illegible] and [illegible] her.

The [illegible] was really [illegible] but perfect beauty and absence of self-consciousness destroyed her.

I cannot say how grateful we should be to Isadora Duncan, Lady Constance Richardson and other artists for exposing their bare limbs and feet upon the stage. They have done more to [illegible] than [illegible] of decent feet than the doctors could do [illegible]. The sight of the horrors that are created [illegible] by patent leather shoes. And then think that there are people who call it shocking to display nice bare feet! Where does the indecency lie? In the mind of the person who is shocked by the bare feet or in the mind of him who wishes to see feet concealed in patent leather shoes? This proves that unless we grow accustomed to look at bare feet and bare limbs we become unnatural. We lose the instinct that should revolt against the deformed and the unnatural. That is one thing I wished to teach.

We must learn to look at human bodies without shame. We must learn to look at a nude statue as an ordeal. We must shrink from nothing that is true in life or art or literature. And in my poses I have tried to show my friends that I am sincere in my preachings and that I have the courage of my convictions. Nor have I lost their esteem—nor my moral standing, which I value as highly as any other pure woman.

What They Are Wearing in Paris

Paris, Dec. 20.

YES! It's furs, furs, furs and then furs. They used to be worn for warmth—but that goes back to the days of the cave-man. We have outgrown all that. The ante-diluvians may have thought that fur was of use to warm animals and man, but that has nothing to do with it.

Fur is the style now. It is said there is no part of the [illegible] which will not take fur. But the fur must be used artistically. It has lost all of the heavy [illegible] and stiffness of skin. It is as soft as eiderdown, and if it appear heavy its weight is lifted by the light fluffiness of the charming tissues with which it is combined.

Fur is worn on hats, on the corsage, on the skirt, on the waist, on the sleeves, wherever it can be made to melt into the other material and not over-weight it.

Strange as it may appear, fur is used now to relieve the heaviness of sombre materials. It is worn to give lightness and variety to the coat or to the cloak. It is used in all colors and shades, in every possible combination.

There are endless surprises in the ways in which fur is being utilized, or the resources of its decorative quality have been at last realized. It melts into the garment, gives it an airiness and touch of lightness which it needed, and we have really a new trimming, used in the most artistic way possible.

No matter what kind of fur you have it may be used. If you have and old skunk muff it can be ripped, apart and be transformed into the most stylish trimming for your new cloak. Even your sable may be utilized without harming it, for it adds the richness of a floral decoration to your new waist.

Furs are no more barbarous. You are not supposed to look like human bears. The fur is a beautifier, not a barbarizer. The face looks out in charming delicacy from the fur setting. All is transformed by it.

And what a variety of shapes are permitted by this season's styles! Any thing is right if you only have some fur, as ornament or trimming. You may run it along the seam of the sleeve. You may really frame the waist in fur, if you do not care for the cost. But all must be done lightly, and with grace. We abhor the heavy and the clumsy. Real richness is shown in the dozen costumes on which it is worn.

The round coat, the long coat, the three-quarter, whatever your fancy dictates, but have fur with it, on it, and all around it and you are absolutely right.

And when it comes to muffs and neck-pieces they too are made in all kinds of fantastic shapes. The idea that the muff is to keep the wearer warm belongs to the Dark Ages of style. It must be chic whether it give warmth or not, and there can hardly be very much warmth in the latest muff, which is drawn closely together in the centre, and is wide-spread at both ends.

But then it is stylish—and different from those worn by other women and that is enough for the up-to-date woman of our time.

You may have the scarf of fur or trimmed with fur, but make it as odd as you please. That makes style just now. Anything commonplace is barred and anything extraordinary can carry the palm. Some wear the scarf close to the neck, while others let it hang over the shoulders, simply as a decoration, and the sooner we reconcile the fact that fur is to be used for decorative purposes alone the sooner shall we be in style.

Why Everything Looks So Queer to a FISH

STRANGER creations than ever peopled a nightmare are those which a fish sees every time a human being comes within range of vision. Instead of the man we know fishes see a fantastic monstrosity having two bodies, four arms and four legs and often with its head quite a distance away from the rest of its body.

Just as objects in water look different to us than they do when seen in the air, so everything a fish sees outside its own lake or ocean is distorted in the queerest way.

Some ingenious experiments which Professor Otto Baron, of Munich, and Prof Robert Williams Wood of Johns Hopkins, have been making have proved just how things in the air look to a fish in the water and just how they look as they do. Professor Wood has even succeeded in devising a camera which very closely reproduces the eye of the fish.

We all know that an object under the water seen from in the air appears to be in a very different position from what it really is. For instance, place a coin in a pitcher so that it is just hidden by the edge of the vessel as you look into it. Then fill the pitcher with water and the coin will come into sight without your changing the position of your eye.

Does BAKER'S Bread Ruin Our TEETH?

A GOOD deal of mystery surrounds much of the baker's bread that we eat. It is natural for all bakers to wish to make as many loaves as possible from every barrel of flour, and to produce this profitable result it is not unreasonable to suppose that some of them may be tempted to add to the flour chemicals which increase its bulk, but decrease its value as food.

At any rate, nearly everybody likes home-made bread better than some baker's bread, and now Dr. Albert B. King, a Baltimore dentist, has discovered a new and important reason why this preference is a sound one.

Baker's bread, Dr. King believes, makes our teeth decay. In a study of the subject covering several years he has found a much greater tendency to decay in the mouths of those who eat baker's bread largely or entirely than with persons who eat home-made bread.

He thinks [illegible] much of the [illegible] producing elements [illegible] only this, but its chemical [illegible] sticks to the teeth, and [illegible] quickly eats into the enamel.

Put This Old War God to Work

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company.

EARTH'S "civilized governments" spend thousands of millions annually on war.

Hundreds of millions are spent for fighting ships absolutely worthless to the world except as checks on possible attack.

Nations live like the armed bandits of olden days, with their minds on bloodshed and battle and their millions spent for murder or preparing for murder.

The United States could make attack from without impossible, stop immediately all WASTING of money, and time, on army and navy, open useful and honorable careers to hundreds of thousands of men, and improve this nation BY PUTTING THE ARMY AND NAVY TO WORK.

Before this century shall have ended some one of the great nations will have adopted the plan to be outlined here. The United States should be that nation, and it will be, if public men, editors, and, above all, the tens of millions of citizens, will give thought to a simple suggestion.

The curse of the army and navy is idleness. Every intelligent officer will confess that he does not know how to keep his men busy. To make them USEFUL is, of course, impossible.

The officers will tell you that men desert because they cannot bear the wasted life that produces nothing.

Why will not this nation make its soldiers and sailors, its ships and its highly educated officers producers of wealth—and, at the same time, perfect guardians of the country.

The nation faced the task and used the army.

Where private effort and private capital had failed, where tens of thousands had succumbed to disease, THE ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES CUT THE ISTHMUS, UNITED THE OCEANS ON SCHEDULE TIME AND FOUGHT AND CONQUERED DISEASE SIMULTANEOUSLY.

If the army CAN do such work, why not KEEP it doing that work?

Why must those officers go back to mere drilling, parading, saluting and IDLING?

The machines that have been working at Panama, the engineers of the army, TENS OF THOUSANDS OF PRIVATE SOLDIERS FROM THE ARMY SHOULD BE PUT TO WORK ON BIGGER NATIONAL TASKS.

Directed by Goethals, they should solve all our problems of water transportation.

First of all, they should unite the city of Chicago, the whole of the Great Lake region, all of the lake cities, with the Gulf of Mexico and the East and the West by means of a great waterway running north and south.

The route by water is already marked out. Nature has done a great part of the work.

The army of the United States should make it possible to ship automobiles from Detroit, manufactured steel from Gary, clothing from Chicago, and all the products of the region of the Middle West by water IN UNBROKEN PACKAGES down to the Gulf of Mexico, east through the canal and west to all of Europe.

The army has made it possible for our east and west coasts to trade by water without going around the Horn.

The army now should make it possible for Chicago products, all the lake city products and the products of all the cities along the Mississippi and the Missouri to go by water direct to all parts of our western and eastern coasts.

Would not that be better than keeping officers and men idle?

The country needs that great "Lincoln Highway," uniting the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans. The army of the United States should build it.

A great English scientist says that "It is a shame to keep the armies of Europe pipe-claying their belts when they might be used for scientific experiment."

Modern Methods Do Not Tolerate Tramps or Idlers.

It Is Time to Put Old Mars, Broken Down Tramp God of War, to Earning His Living.

This Country Can Solve the Problem of Perpetual Peace, the Problem of Our Merchant Marine, and the Problem of the Unemployed by Making the Army and Navy Active and Self-Supporting.

The army should not be used merely for pipe-claying belts nor for scientific experiments in diet.

Human intelligence easily could arrange an army and navy programme that would give employment to hundreds of thousands reclaiming our swamps, irrigating our deserts, carrying our ocean freights and our passengers on inland waterways, AT THE SAME TIME MAKING THE IDEA OF ATTACK BY A FOREIGN ENEMY PREPOSTEROUS.

We have at best a few battleships and a few cruisers, coalers, torpedo boats, etc.

A parsimonious and one-sided Congress refuses even reasonable appropriations. Intelligence should show Congress that appropriations for the army and navy could be multiplied by ten AND THE NATIONAL WEALTH THUS INCREASED.

We have no United States Merchant Marine.

Let the people of the United States combine a merchant marine and a protective navy in one.

The country, to begin, should build 500 powerful ships, that need not be the latest type of battleship, nor laden down with armor or guns, but carrying the freight of the country.

Let them leave their big guns on shore in time of peace.

Thus our ancestors of the Revolution and the fighting Boers of the Transvaal left their rifles hanging over the mantelpiece while they worked in the fields. But their enemies knew that the rifles were there to be used. England found out to her cost that a man might use his rifle only occasionally and still be a formidable soldier. Our battleships could leave their guns "hanging over the mantel" on shore.

Suppose that the United States owned 500 great ships at sea, each carrying its thousands of tons of freight, at a price only sufficient to pay the cheap interest charge at which this government can borrow money.

Suppose that the United States on lakes, rivers and other inland waters, had another fleet of a thousand swift boats, EACH WITH A TORPEDO TUBE IN THE BOW, these boats carrying passengers, express and mail in time of peace.

Uncle Sam could say to his friends across the ocean, "I don't want to fight and I don't bleed my people to death building dreadnoughts. But I have 500 heavy ships and for each one an equipment of great power guns that could be quickly taken aboard in place of freight.

"And I have a thousand swiftly moving boats, each with its torpedo tube, capable of carrying a big load of torpedoes.

"My sailors are well paid and contented, because they are WORKING usefully. My gunners, kept in constant practise, are the best in the world.

Send your fleets to attack me. I will meet you with half a thousand heavy ships, well armed, and a thousand torpedo boats and a thousand air machines carrying dynamite."

Is there any reason why the United States in place of a little expensive navy, run at a dead loss and costing hundreds of millions a year, should not have a gigantic commercial navy, self supporting, limited in size only by the size of the prosperity and freight demands of the United States?

With 500 great ships, 5,000 big guns that could quickly be put aboard, divided between our Pacific coast and our Eastern coast, with the Panama Canal uniting them, and with a thousand swift torpedo boats to sail out with them, why should we need fear the small battle fleets that might come straggling across the thousands of miles of ocean to attack us?

IF JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER OWNED THE UNITED STATES, DON'T YOU SUPPOSE THAT HIS ORGANIZING ABILITY WOULD MULTIPLY OUR NAVY BY A HUNDRED, MAKE IT PAY ITS OWN WAY AND MAKE THE SAILORS, INSTEAD OF BEING CONSTANT DESERTERS, SATISFIED MEN—AS THE DRIVERS OF THE STANDARD OIL WAGONS ARE SATISFIED?

Why cannot the people of the United States do for themselves with their own navy what John D. Rockefeller would do if the navy were his?

If Rockefeller owned the army of the United States and the soil of the United States, would not that army be made self supporting, that soil more valuable?

The Roman soldier was used to conquer and kill peaceful, helpless half civilized peoples. In his old age they gave him a few acres of the land whose owners he had helped to murder.

The army of the United States could conquer deserts and swamps by irrigating and draining. And the soldier in his old age, as a reward, would have his farm, given to him as part of the land RECLAIMED BY HIM.

Even in the hardest times it is difficult to get men for our army. HEALTHY MEN HATE A LAZY, IDLE LIFE. But give your army good pay, eight hours of work per day, three hours of drill per week—which would be plenty—and freedom like any other worker, the rest of the time, AND YOU WILL HAVE AN ARMY WORTH WHILE.

The army of the United States should be a citizen army, with half a million useful men in place of the little handful of professional do-nothings.

Each of these men would have his fighting equipment in the national barracks, to be used only in the event of war—and that would never come.

No nation would attack this country if we had a fleet as big as our prosperity and a well-paid, patriotic citizen army as big as our need of internal improvement.

Armies and navies were maintained in the beginning to uphold tyranny and flatter the vanity of rulers. The soldier was saddled on the back of the peasant, who had to feed him. And bleeding the peasantry with taxes and the sword was royal pastime.

The same system has continued in Europe, a non-productive army, idle, and fed by the poor workers.

We should have a better system in this country. Some man will come to power able to install such a system.

We MUST BE READY for war, since we are surrounded by the spirit of war and by fighting machines.

But the richest nation in the world, possessing natural fighters, magnificent gunners, competent engineers and fearless, well-educated officers, can do something better than maintain an army and navy of parade and idleness.

Put the army and navy to WORK.

Pay the officers, private soldiers and sailors double their present pay, AND LET THEM EARN THEIR MONEY.

Give them a job worth defending. There never was a paid soldier that would fight as a man will fight for his house and his living.

Five hundred great ships carrying cargoes on the ocean, five thousand powerful guns, with ammunition, kept on shore ready for instant use; a thousand torpedo boats, a trained, working army of a quarter of million, well paid and well pensioned—that should be the programme of the United States, and that WILL BE THE PROGRAMME before this century shall have ended.

From Jack London's "The Sea Gangsters" in the January number of HEARST'S MAGAZINE

TH[illegible] West [illegible] for stowing [illegible] [illegible] spine [illegible] packing [illegible] occurred in which I was concerned. I was in the room when Mulligan Jacobs first came in to go to work, and I could not help observing the startled [illegible] he threw [illegible] my big [illegible] of books. He advanced on them in the way a robber might advance on a secret hoard of gold and as a miser would fond [illegible] Jacobs fondled [illegible] book titles with his eyes.

And such [illegible]! All the bitterness and [illegible] Mr. Pike had told me the man [illegible] was there in his eyes. [illegible] small pale blue and [illegible] with fire. His eyelids were [illegible] served to [illegible] cold-blazing intensity of [illegible]. The man was [illegible] a hater and I was [illegible] hating that he [illegible] all the [illegible] books.

"Would you care to read some of them?" I said hospitably.

All the caress in his eyes for the books vanished as he turned his head to look at me, and, ere he spoke, I knew that I, too, was [illegible]. "It's hell, ain't it, you with a strong body an' servants to carry for you a weight of books like this, and me with a curved spine that puts the pot-hooks of hell-fire into my brain?"

How can I possibly convey the terrible venomousness with which he uttered these words? [illegible] that Mr. Pike [illegible] down [illegible] gave [illegible] sense of [illegible] with [illegible] above all, the pit [illegible] with which the [illegible] me and addressed me [illegible] pleasant. I swear I [illegible] calculated [illegible] apprehension, but blind [illegible] unreasoned terror. The ma[illegible] of the creature was [illegible], nor did it require [illegible] convey it; it poured from [illegible] of his red-rimmed, blazing eyes, out of his withered, twisted, tortured face, out of his broken nailed, crooked talons of [illegible]. And yet, in that very moment of instinctive startle and repulsion the thought was in my mind that with one hand I could take the throat of the weazened wisp of a crippled thing and throttle the malformed life out of it.

But there was little encouragement in such thought no more than a man might feel in a cave of rattlesnakes, or a pit of centipedes, for, crush them with [illegible] very bulk, nevertheless they would first sink their poison into him. And so with this Mulligan Jacobs. My fear of him was the fear of being infected with his venom. I could not help it; for I caught a quick vision of the black and [illegible] teeth I had seen in his [illegible] sinking into my [illegible], biting me, eating me with their [illegible].

One thing was very clear. In the creature was no fear. Absolutely he did not know fear. He was [illegible] of it as the fetid [illegible] one treads underfoot [illegible] nightmares. Lord, Lord, that is what the thing was, a nightmare.

"You suffer pain often?" I [illegible] attempting to get myself in hand by the calculated use of sympathy.

"The books are in me, in me brain, white-hot books that burn an' burn," was his reply. "But by what damnable right do you have all these books, and time to read 'em, an' soak in them, when me brain's on fire, and I'm watch and watch, an' no broken spine w[illegible] let me carry half a hundred w[illegible] of books at [illegible] with me."

It w[illegible] this stage in our [illegible] that Mr. Pike thrust his head into [illegible]. He did not [illegible] favored me with a [illegible] of disapprobation. Mr. [illegible] countenance is almost petrified. Any expansion seems to crack [illegible] with the exception of sourness [illegible] Mr. Pike wants to [illegible] he has no difficulty at all [illegible] hard-skinned, hard [illegible] just flows to source [illegible] he condensed his [illegible] ing Mulligan Jacobs [illegible] Mulligan Jacobs he said, [illegible] snarl. "Go on an' get to your work. Chew the rag in your [illegible]."

[illegible] I got a sample of Mulligan [illegible] venom of hatred [illegible] in his face [illegible] with wh[illegible] I had a fee[illegible] in cold [illegible] his face [illegible] sparks.

If ever [illegible] in [illegible] his arm [illegible] not o[illegible] but [illegible] of that beast [illegible] Jacobs and all the poisonous flame of him would have been quenched in the everlasting darkness. But he was unafraid. Like a cornered rat, like a rattlesnake on the trail, flinching, sneering, snarling, he faced the irate giant. More than that. He even thrust his face forward on its twisted neck to meet the blow.

It was too much for Mr. Pike; it was too impossible to strike that frail crippled repulsive thing.

"It's me that can call you the stiff," said Mulligan Jacobs. "I ain't no Larry. G'wan an' hit me. Why don't you hit me?"

And Mr. Pike was too appalled to strike the creature. He, whose whole career on the sea had been [illegible] a bucko driver in a shambles, [illegible] could not strike this fractured splinter of a man. I swear that Mr. Pike actually struggled with himself to strike. I saw it. But he could not.

"Go on to your work," he ordered. "The voyage is young yet, Mulligan. I'll have you eatin' outa my hand before it's over."

And Mulligan Jacobs' face thrust another inch closer on its twisted neck, while all his concentrated [illegible] seemed on the verge of bursting into incandescence. So immense and tremendous was the bitterness that consumed him that he could find no words to clothe it. All he could do was to hawk and guttural deep in his throat until I should not have been surprised had he spat poison in the mate's face.

And so it goes on this ship.

I can't get it out of my head. The picture of the mate and the [illegible] facing each other keeps [illegible] under my eyelids. This [illegible] from the books and [illegible] what I know of existence. It [illegible]. Life is a profound [illegible] thing. What is this [illegible] flame that consumes Mulligan Jacobs? How dare he—with no hope of any profit, not a hero, [illegible] leader of a forlorn hope nor a martyr to God, but a mere filthy, malignant rat—how dare he, I ask myself, be so defiant, so death-inviting? The spectacle of him makes me doubt all the schools of the metaphysicians and the realists. No philosophy has a leg to stand on that does not account for Mulligan Jacobs. And all the midnight oil of philosophy I have burned does not enable me to account for Mulligan Jacobs . . . unless he be insane. And then I don't know.

Was there ever such a freight of human souls on the sea as these humans with whom I am herded on the Elsinore?

It seems impossible to think so.

And now, working in my rooms, white-leading and turpentining, is another one of them. I have learned his name. It is Arthur Deacon. He is the pallid furtive-eyed man whom I observed the first day when the men were routed out of the forecastle to man the windlass—the man I so instantly adjudged a drug fiend. He certainly looks it.

I asked Mr. Pike his estimate of the man.

"White slaver," was his answer. "Had to skin outa New York to save his skin. He'll be consorting with those other three larrikins I gave a piece of my mind to."

"And what do you make of them?" I asked.

"A month's wage to a pound of tobacco that a district attorney, or a committee of some sort investigating the New York police is lookin' for 'em right now. I'd like to have the cash somebody's put up in New York to send them on this get-away. Oh, I know the breed."

"Gangsters?" I queried.

"That's what. But I'll trim their dirty hides. I'll trim 'em, Mr. Pathurst, this voyage ain't started yet, and this old stiff's a long way from his last legs. I'll give them a run for their money. Why, I've buried better men than the best of them aboard this craft. And I'll bury some of them that think me an old stiff."

He paused and looked at me solemnly for a full half minute.

"Mr. Pathurst, I've heard you're a writing man. And when they told me at the agents you were going along passenger, I made a point of going to see your play. Now I'm not saying anything about the play, one way or the other. But I just want to tell you, that as a writing man you'll get stuff in plenty to write about on this voyage. Hell's going to pop, believe me, and right here before you is the stiff that'll do a lot of the poppin'. Some several and plenty's going to learn who's an old stiff."

"Thank goodness that's settled," was Miss West's exclamation this morning, when we met on the poop and after I had told her how gloriously I had slept.

And then, that nightmare episode dismissed because, forsooth, for all practical purposes it was settled, she next said:

"Come on and see the chickens."

And I accompanied her along the spidery bridge to the top of the mid ship house, to look at the one rooster and the four dozen fat hens in the ship's chicken coop.

As I accompanied her, my eye dwelling pleasurably on that vital gait of hers as she preceded me, I could not help reflecting that, coming down on the tug from Baltimore, she had promised not to bother me nor require to be entertained.

Come and see the chickens'—Oh, the sheer female possessiveness of that simple invitation! For effrontery of possessiveness, is there anything that can exceed the nest-making, planet populating, female, human woman?—Come and see the chickens! Oh, well, the sailors for'ard may be hard bitten, but I can promise Miss Ward that here, aft, is one male passenger, unmarried and never married, who is an equally hard bitten adventurer on the sea of matrimony. When I go over the census I remember at least several women, superior to Miss West, who trilled their song of sex and failed to shipwreck me.

As I read over what I have written, I notice how the terminology of the sea has stolen into my mental processes. Involuntarily I think in terms of the sea. Another thing I noticed is my excessive use of superlatives. But then, everything on board the Elsinore is superlative. I find myself continually combing my vocabulary in quest of just and adequate words. Yet am I aware of failure. For example, all the words of all the dictionaries would fail to approximate the exceeding terribleness of Mulligan Jacobs.

But to return to the chickens. Despite every pr[illegible], it was evident that they had had a hard time during the past days of storm. It was equally evident that Miss West, even during her seasickness, had not neglected them. Under her directions the steward had actually installed a small oil stove in the big coop, and she now beckoned him up to the top of the house as he was passing for'ard to the galley. It was for the purpose of instructing him further in the matter of feeding them.

Where were the grits? They needed grits. He didn't know. The sack had been lost among the miscellaneous stores, but Mr. Pike had promised a couple of sailors that afternoon to overhaul the lazarette.

"Plenty of ashes," she told the steward. "Remember. And if a sailor doesn't clean the coop each day, you report to me. And give them only clean food—no spoiled scraps, mind. How many eggs yesterday?"

The steward's eyes glistened with enthusiasm as he said he had got nine the day before and expected fully a dozen today.

"The poor things," said Miss West to me. "You've no idea how bad weather reduces their laying." She turned back upon the steward. "Mind now, you watch and find out which hens don't lay, and kill them first. And you ask me each time before you kill one."

I found myself neglected, out there on top of the drafty house, while Miss West talked chickens with the Chinese ex-smuggler. But it gave me opportunity to observe her. It is the length of her eyes that accentuates their steadiness of gaze—helped, of course, by the dark brows and lashes. I noted again the warm gray of her eyes. And I began to identify her, to locate her. She is a physical type of the best of the womanhood of old New England. Nothing spare nor meagre, and yet, not quite what one would call robust. When I said she was strapping-bodied, I erred. I must fall back on my other word, which will have to be the last: Miss West is vital-bodied. That is the key-word.

Returning to my use of superlatives in this narrative. When we had regained the poop, and Miss West had gone below, I ventured my customary pleasantry with Mr. Mellaire, of "And has O'Sullivan bought Andy Fay's sea-boots yet?"

"Not yet, Mr. Pathurst," was the reply, "though he nearly got them early this morning. Come on along, sir, and I'll show you."

Vouchsafing no further information, the second mate led the way along the bridge, across the mid-ship-house and the for'ard house. From the edge of the latter, looking down on Number One hatch, I saw two Japanese, with sail needles and twine sewing up a canvas-swathed bundle that unmistakably contained a human body.

"O'Sullivan used a razor," said Mr. Mellaire.

"And that is Andy Fay?" I cried.

"No, sir, not Andy. That's a Dutchman. Christian Jespersen was his name on the articles. He got in O'Sullivan's way when O'Sullivan went after the boots. That's what saved Andy. Andy was more active. Jespersen couldn't get out of his own way, much less out of O'Sullivan's. There's Andy sitting over there."

I followed Mr. Mellaire's gaze, and saw the burnt-out, aged, little Scotchman squatted on a spare spar and sucking a pipe. One arm was in a sling, and his head was bandaged. Beside him squatted Mulligan Jacobs. They were a pair. Both were blue-eyed and both were malevolent-eyed. And they were equally emaciated. It was easy to see that they had discovered early in the voyage their kinship of bitterness. Andy Fay, I knew, was sixty-three years old, although he looked a hundred, and Mulligan Jacobs, who was only about fifty, made up for the difference by the furnace-heat of hatred that burned in his face and eyes. I wondered if he sat beside the injured bitter one in sorrow [illegible] of sympathy or if he were there in order to gloat.

Around the corner of the house strolled Shorty, flinging up to me [illegible] inevitable clown-grin. One hand was [illegible] in bandages.

"[illegible] must have kept Mr. Pike busy," was my comment to Mr. Mellaire.

"He was sewing up cripples about all his watch from four till [illegible]."

"What?" I asked. "Are there any [illegible]?"

"One more, sir, a Sheeny. I didn't know his name before, but Mr. Pike got it—Isaac B. Chantz. I never saw in all my life at sea as many Sheenies as are on board the Elsinore right now. Sheenies don't take to the sea as a rule. We've certainly got more than our share of them. Chantz isn't badly hurt, but you ought to hear him whimper."

"Where's O'Sullivan?" I inquired.

"In the 'midship-house with Davis, and without a mark. Mr. Pike got into the rumpus and put him to sleep with one on the jaw. And now he's lashed down and talking in a trance. He's thrown the fear of God into Davis. Davis is sitting up in his bunk with a marlinspike, threatening to brain O'Sullivan if he starts to break loose, and complaining that it's no way to run a hospital. He'd have padded cells, straitjackets, night and day nurses, and violent wards, I suppose—and a convalescent's home in a Queen Anne cottage on the poop."

"Oh dear, oh dear," Mr. Mellaire sighed. "This is the funniest voyage and the funniest crew I've ever tackled. It's not going to come to a good end. Anybody can see that with half an eye. It'll be dead of Winter off the Horn, and a fo'c's'le full of lunatics and cripples to do the work. Just take a look at that one. Crazy as a bedbug. He's likely to go overboard any time."

I followed his glance and saw Tony, the Greek, the one who had sprung overboard the first day. He had just come around the corner of the house, and, beyond one arm in a sling, seemed in good condition. He walked easily and with strength, a testimonial to the virtues of Mr. Pike's rough surgery.

My eyes kept returning to the canvas-covered body of Christian Jespersen, and to the Japanese who sewed with sail twine his sailor's shroud.

Wada told me a strange thing this morning. It seems that he, the steward, and the two sail-makers foregather each evening in the cook's room—all being Asiatics—where they talk over ship's gossip. They seem to miss little, and Wada brings it all to me. The thing Wada told me was the curious conduct of Mr. Mellaire. They have sat in judgment on him, and they do not approve of his intimacy with the three gangsters for'ard.

"But, Wada," I said, "he is not that kind of a man. He is very hard and rough with all the sailors. He treats them like dogs. You know that."

"Sure," assented Wada. "Other sailors he do that. But those three very bad men he make good friends. Louis say second mate belongs aft like first mate and captain. No good for second mate talk like friend with sailors. No good for ship. Bimeby trouble. You see. Louis say Mr. Mellaire crazy do that kind funny business."

All of which, if it were true, and I saw no reason to doubt it, led me to inquire. It seems that the gangsters, Kid Twist, Nosey Murphy and Bert Rhine, have made themselves cocks of the forecastle. Standing together they have established a reign of terror and are ruling the forecastle. All their training in New York in ruling the slum brutes and weaklings in their gangs fits them for the part. As near as I could make out from Wada's tale, they first began on the two Italians in their watch, Guido Bombini and Mike Cipriani. By means I cannot guess, they have reduced these two wretches to trembling slaves. As an instance, the other night, according to the ship's gossip, Bert Rhine made Bombini get out of bed and fetch him a drink of water.

Isaac Chantz is likewise under their rule, though he is treated more kindly. Herman Lunkenheimer, a good-natured but simple-minded dolt of a German, received a severe beating from the three because he refused to wash some of Nosey Murphy's dirty garments. The two bos'ns are in fear of their lives with this clique, which is growing; for Steve Roberts, the ex-cowboy, and the white-slaver, Arthur Deacon, have been admitted to it.

I am the only one aft who possesses this information, and I confess I don't know what to do with it. I know that Mr. Pike would tell me to mind my own business. Mr. Mellaire is out of the question. And Captain West hasn't any crew. And I fear Miss West would laugh at me for my pains.

The full installment of this fascinating story from which the foregoing excerps are taken will be found in the January number of HEARST'S MAGAZINE.

"You poor child," she said at last, "and when I think of all the cream of tartar I made you consume! What you needed was exterior treatment."

THAT AFFAIR NEXT DOOR--By Anna Katherine Green

When every spot [illegible] I sat down [illegible] what lay before [illegible] whose flight [illegible] she made [illegible] only too [illegible] she had played [illegible] which [illegible] rested. I had [illegible] ment [illegible] already [illegible] the [illegible] cast [illegible] Miss Al[illegible] [illegible] her [illegible] me [illegible] was [illegible] and [illegible] dwell [illegible] indep[illegible] envy [illegible] or a husband. I [illegible] pendent, and I am, and what more is there to be said about it? Pardon the digression.

"Is Miss Oliver any better?" asked Miss Althorpe, "and have you found——"

I put up my finger in warning. Of all things, it was most necessary that the sick woman should not know my real reason for being there.

"She is asleep. I answered quietly, "and I think I [illegible] found out what is the matter with her."

Miss Althorpe seemed to understand. She cast a look of solicitude toward the bed and then [illegible] toward me.

"I cannot rest," said she, "and [illegible] with you for a little while, [illegible] mind."

[illegible] implied compliment [illegible].

[illegible] me no greater favor [illegible].

She [illegible] an easy chair [illegible] smiled and [illegible] at [illegible].

She sighed softly—how much a sigh can reveal!—and looked up at me brightly. I think she was glad I spoke. Even such reserved natures as hers have their moments of weakness, and she had no mother or sister to appeal to.

"Yes," she replied, "I am very happy; happier than most girls [illegible] just before marriage. It's [illegible] revelation to me—this [illegible] admiration from one [illegible] so little of it [illegible] father——"

She stopped. I knew why she stopped. I gave her a look of encouragement.

[illegible] have always been anxious for my happiness and have warned me against matrimony [illegible] enough to know the difference between poverty and wealth. [illegible] I was out of short [illegible] warned against fortune [illegible]. It was not good advice; it has stood in the way of [illegible] all my life, made me [illegible] and unnaturally reserved. But now, ah, Miss Butterworth, Mr. Stone is so estimable a [illegible] and so universally [illegible] all my doubts of [illegible] disinterestedness have disappeared as if by magic [illegible]—Do I talk too freely? Do you object to such confidences as these?"

"On the contrary," I answered. I liked Miss Althorpe so much and agreed with her so thoroughly in her opinion of this man, that it was a real pleasure to me to hear her speak so unreservedly.

"We are [illegible] foolish couple," she went on, [illegible] charming with the charm of h[illegible] till she looked beautiful in the half light thrown upon her by the shaded lamp. "We are interested in people and things and get half our delight from the perfect congeniality of our natures. Mr. Stone has given up [illegible] club and all his bachelor pursuits since he knew me, and—"

O love, if at any time in my life I have despised thee, I did not despise thee then! The look with which she finished this sentence would have moved a cynic.

"Forgive me," she prayed. "It's the first time I have poured out my heart to any one of my own sex. It must sound strange to you, but it seemed natural while I was doing it, for you looked as if you could understand."

This to me, to me, Amelia Butterworth, of whom men have said I had no more sentiment than a wooden image. I looked my appreciation, and she, blushing slightly, whispered in a delicious tone of mingled shyness and pride:

"Only two weeks now, and I shall have some one to stand between me and the world. You have never needed any one, Miss Butterworth, for you do not fear the world, but it awes and troubles me and my whole heart glows with the thought that I shall be no longer alone in my sorrows or my joys, my perplexities or my doubts. Am I to blame for anticipating this with so much happiness?"

I sighed. It was a less eloquent sigh than hers, but it was a distinct one and it had a distinct echo. Lifting my eyes, for I sat so as to face the bed, I was startled to observe my patient leaning toward us from her pillows, and staring upon us with eyes too hollow for tears, but filled with unfathomable grief and yearning.

She had heard this talk of love, she, the forsaken and crime-stained one. I shuddered and laid my hand on Miss Althorpe's.

But I did not seek to stop the conversation, for as our looks met, the sick woman fell back and lapsed, or seemed to lapse, into immediate insensibility again.

"Is Miss Oliver worse?" inquired Miss Althorpe.

I rose and went to the bedside, renewed the bandages on my patient's head, and forced a drop or two of medicine between her half-shut lips.

"No," I returned. "I think her fever is abating." And it was, though the suffering on her face was yet heart-rendingly apparent.

"Is she asleep?"

"She seems to be."

Miss Althorpe made an effort.

"I am not going to talk any more about myself." Then as I came back and sat down by her side, she quietly asked.

"What do you think of the Van Burnam murder?"

Dismayed at the introduction of this topic, I was about to put my hand over her mouth, when I noticed that her words had made no evident impression upon my patient, who lay quietly and with a more composed expression than when I left her bedside. This assured me, as nothing else could have done, that she was really asleep, or in that lethargic state which closes the eyes and ears to what is going on.

I think, said I, "that the young man Howard stands in a very unfortunate position. Circumstances certainly do look very black against him."

"It is dreadful, unprecedentedly dreadful. I do not know what to think of it all. The Van Burnams have borne so good a name, and Franklin especially is held in such high esteem. I don't think anything more shocking has ever happened in this city, do you, Miss Butterworth? You saw it all, and should know. Poor, poor Mrs. Van Burnam!"

"She is to be pitied!" I remarked, my eyes fixed on the immovable face of my patient.

The Blindness of Virtue ~ By Cosmo Hamilton

Author of "A [illegible] Clay"

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

HARRY PEMBERTON is what might be called a practical parson. With the help of his pretty wife he conducts the affairs of a humble parish in East Brenton in a way that draws the admiration and support of everybody. He is athletic and popular with the young, sympathetic and in favor with the old, generous and loved by the poor.

They have a daughter, Effie, beautiful, charming and modest, whom they rear with the utmost care, her only companions being her father, mother and Cookie, the maid. The girl is carefully guarded against all untoward influences and reaches the age of nineteen as unsophisticated as an infant.

Just as she is wondering what life really means, and is reaching out to grasp its secrets, there comes a young man, Archie Graham, to be tutored by her father. He has been a bit wild at college, been dismissed, and then sent by his father to be guided by the parson. Archie is an honorable fellow and promptly makes himself a favorite in the household.

As the weeks go by Effie falls deeply in love with the boy, but doesn't realize it until he goes to London for a day and evening's pleasure with an old boy chum. He intends to return on the midnight train, but does not get back until after the breakfast.

Meanwhile, Harry has been called to see Mary Anne Lemmins, the nineteen-year-old daughter of a poor parishioner. The girl had left home with a man she loved and trusted, had been betrayed by him and then deserted, and had come home, weary, wan and sick.

While talking with the girl, Harry comes suddenly to realize that it was her ignorance of delicate matters, on which she should have been enlightened by her mother, that was directly responsible for her pitiful plight. He thereupon determines that he will fight this ignorance, which he knows prevails generally.

Mary Ann's baby dies at birth. After the funeral, Harry assembles all the mothers in the parish and tells them what their duty is toward their daughters.

CHAPTER XXV.

"Ignorance Is Virtue's Most Cunning Enemy."

HARRY PEMBERTON and Helen returned to the Vicarage. Neither spoke. All Helen's sympathies were with the golden-haired, blue-eyed child who would wake to find that although she was a mother she had no baby. She was silent because there were tears in her throat.

Harry was silent because he had not recovered from, and would not recover from for a long time, the shock he had received from Mary Anne when she told him the point of view of the father of her child. It was so obviously the true point of view, especially in relation to Mary Anne, that he could do nothing but reproach himself for never having discovered it.

"There is Effie," he repeated inwardly again, and again—"there is Effie."

Harry followed Helen up to her bedroom.

He sat down by the open window. Effie and Archie were playing in a set of tennis before luncheon. Both young faces shone with health and animal spirits. Both were playing hard and extremely well and with deadly earnestness.

Helen stood in front of the glass and took off her hat.

"Does Effie know?" asked Harry.

"Know what, dear?"

"Everything—all that there is to know—the truth!"

Helen turned with a look of amazement on her pretty face.

"I thought that the—the things you told our women to tell their girls, applied to—their girls only. You surely don't mean that I am to tell—— Oh! you can't mean——"

Harry rose, strode over to his wife, and put his hands on her shoulders.

"Then Effie is as ignorant as poor little Mary Anne?"

"Effie is different from those girls. She is refined and good and——"

"She is a woman, she is a human being."

"Don't you trust her?"

"It is her right to know."

"But——"

"There is no but, darling."

"There is a but, Harry, there is—in Effie's case. She has no temptation."

"How do we know that?"

Helen's eyes took on a startled expression. "You mean—Archie," she said.

"No, I don't. I mean any one. We know nothing of Effie's mind on this point. We only know that she is nineteen and over, that if she is a healthy girl she has, whether she knows it or not, the maternal instinct. Have you never spoken to her on the matter?"

"No—it—it isn't done."

For the first time in their married life Harry showed anger with his wife.

"It isn't done!" he cried—"it isn't done! It wasn't done by Mrs. Lemmins. Is the innocence of her girl of a less refined order than the innocence of ours? It isn't done! Nearly everything that isn't done ought to be done. All our working lives you and I have been fighting with that cowardly sentiment. It must be, and shall be, done, and you must do it, at once."

Helen's eyes filled with tears.

Harry caught her in his arms, and covered her face with kisses.

"Forgive me, darling. I didn't mean to speak angrily to you of all precious people in the world. But if there is one expression in our language that makes me stiffen, 'it isn't done' is the one. Kiss me."

She kissed him, and put her arms round him.

"I thought the things you told our women to tell their girls applied to their girls only. You surely don't mean that I am to tell"——

"Helen," he went on, "never in my life have I been so humbled and ashamed as I am to-day. Mary Anne's case is not the first by a hundred that has filled us with pity. How many of these might never have occurred if the girl had known what she was doing—if she had had even the glimmering of an idea of what it leads to? The village is filled with young, pale girls who may be standing on the verge of the same catastrophe—and Effie is one of them. She and all of them ask for the truth every time they see their mothers, whether they know it or not, and never get it—because it isn't done. They are taught not to put their fingers in the fire because it will burn them. They are taught not to play with knives, and to keep away from water. Let them burn themselves, let them cut their fingers, let them run the risk of drowning, but, for heaven's sake don't let them, for want of elementary teaching on the most vital of all questions, run the risk of ruin!"

"But if a girl is clean-minded——"

"Who's to know that she's clean-minded? Who's to know that nature hasn't punished her by giving her desires as strong as those of men?"

"Such a girl as that will not remain innocent, whether she knows or not."

"That's not true. That's a sweeping assertion, an uncharitable idea. Here and there, of course, there are poor girls to whom morality and innocence mean nothing under the stress of their natures. But to ninety-nine out of a hundred virtue means everything. Ignorance is virtue's most cunning enemy, and I say now—I wish with all my soul that I had said it twenty years ago—that a woman who lets her daughter struggle blindly through the awakening years of her womanhood is not fit to be a mother."

The parson's agitation made him stride about the room.

"There is not a home in this place where the truth is told. Not one, poor or middle class. There is hardly a home in England where it is told. You say so. You said 'it isn't done.' We educate, we advance, we are broad-minded in all unessential things, but this—this thing, the very root of all life and happiness—this is kept a secret. The great, big, essential thing is simpered about and whispered about behind people's backs, made a disgusting mystery of, treated as a thing either to be ashamed of or indulged in in hidden places. Boys may be told, but not girls! Why, we foster the ruin of women, we encourage immorality, we put a premium on suicide and ruin and murder by clinging to this vile and cruel convention. If mothers are too ashamed of being mothers to tell their daughters that they also will one day be mothers, if their modesty is so nice, their sense of decency so [illegible] they can't open their lips on a matter [illegible] it will and must be of the first importance to their girls, then let the be class[illegible] schools, let there be part lectures[illegible] from place to place. Because [illegible] done, mothers, doctors clergymen, teachers, conspire to keep up the conv[illegible] mystery about the one great thing which ought not to be a mystery. [illegible] more of this for me. I will leave no w[illegible] in this place in peace until she has done the greatest duty of her motherh[illegible] If there are to be any more little g[illegible]es in this place, any more poor, nameless harmless children on this green, it shall not be through ignorance. I will insist upon the truth, and, please God! I have enough years before me to make up for some of my lost time."

Harry stopped, and once again put his arms round his wife. "Darling," he said "no man can tell what he will do under temptation. No woman can tell what she may do in ignorance. Never in my life shall I forget what Mary Anne told me two nights ago. Effie—might have been Mary Anne. Effie—think of it! I won't argue round the subject from its wide point of view, or go into how it may affect the people whose lives I long to make brighter outside the house. I will stamp about and generalise no more. As Effie's father I ask you just this: Are you going to be brave enough to do something that isn't done, rise above a rotten convention, and put yourself to the distress and discomfort of telling the truth to Effie—or will you leave it to me?"

"I will tell her," said Helen

CHAPTER XXVI.

Harry as a Marriage Manager.

ONE afternoon late in August a heavy step on the gravel made Bill look up. He saw a well set-up, stout man, respectably dressed in a tight-fitting tweed suit, march round the garden with Cookie Besides wearing a black dress with a rose pinned upon her bosom, she wore a proud, proprietary smile.

They were hand in hand, these two, as they had every right to be, for they had been engaged to be married for twenty years.

Christmas had succeeded Christmas, midsummer followed midsummer, and Fred Jennings came down once a fortnight from London, but never fixed the day.

There were other men in the village who would gladly have led the funny little woman to church, but Cookie remained true to Fred Jennings year in, year out. When he was out of work, as he was sometimes for weeks together, not only her savings, but the whole of her wages went regularly to London in one of the parson's envelopes.

No one believed that Fred Jennings meant marriage as time went on. Even Cookie sometimes doubted it. But she had told curious questioners so often that "she couldn't leave the Vicar, Mr. Jennings must wait," that she had grown to believe it herself.

Fred Jennings had come down in answer to a peremptory letter from Harry Pemberton.

It had been reported to the Vicar [illegible] Mr. MacFall that Jennings had been seen at the Earl's Court Exhibition on several occasions with a young woman who worked in a tea-shop in the Edgware Road. Harry knew of this long engagement, of Cookie's unfailing generosity and constancy, and he was not going to allow, if he could help it, anything to shatter the romance of his old servant's life.

When Jennings arrived, not without nervousness, Harry was out reading [illegible] rocks" to old Joe Judd, who had returned from the hospital to die at home

"Looks nice, don't it?" she asked, [illegible] an air of proper pride.

"Ah!" said Jennings, "I could do w[illegible] this place."

They stood under a pergola, over which a William Allan Richardson had spread its long arms and sharp fingers. Cookie looked round, put her arms round the man's short red neck, and kissed him

A look of remorse came into Jennings's eyes. He held the little elderly [illegible] tight for a moment.

"Jennings!"

The two started apart.

"Sir!"

"A word with you."

Cookie giggled, and walked past the window.

[illegible] ave caught [illegible] in't you?

[illegible]

[illegible]gned

[illegible]s walked [illegible] to the

H[illegible] tapped at Ha[illegible]

[illegible]own, Jennings," said Harry, shut[illegible] door

[illegible] you, sir!" He was [illegible]ful [illegible]ge man, with thick ankles

Ha[illegible]t his pipe, and stood with his [illegible] the empty grate

N[illegible] then, Fred Jennings. [illegible] I want for you to ask you several [illegible]tions. Are you still in love with Cook[illegible]

The man cleared his throat. "Dea[illegible] sir," he said

"And you still wish to marry her?

"It's the dream of my life, sir."

Then why are you philandering with a tea-shop girl?"

Jennings blushed hotly, and passed the back of his left hand over his mouth

"You don't deny it?"

I do not deny as I've taken a certain young lady for a treat all as innocent as innocent, same as you might

"Have you told Cookie?"

"There would 'ave been no call for me to deny it if she'd put the question, sir."

Harry was silent for a moment. "Jennings," he said, "Cookie is an old and valued friend of mine. I know what she has done for you on many occasions, and I know how much she loves you. She is a very good and rare woman, of whom any man might be proud. If you're telling me the truth about being devoted——"

Jennings broke in. He raised his hand above his head with a gesture that was ludicrous in its solemnity

"It's the truth, sir, if it's the last word I ever speak on earth. I love Cookie true and tender, same as I did when I asked her the question when we was in our prime. It ain't a fierce love, as it were then. It's mellier and settled, and don't worry me. It's more like the love of a man for his wife than his sweetheart, and it's all the better for that."

"Very well then," said Harry, "make your plans to marry Cookie as soon as possible."

"My dear Cookie, knowing of the state Jennings and I are in over [illegible] friends [illegible] ever. I asked you to [illegible] I thought [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] post [illegible] and I will have in the [illegible] hear to it.

"Oh, Freddie!" [illegible]

Jennings raised his hand [illegible] at the Vicar

Harry lowered his voice. "The reason he accepted the post, my dear old Cookie, is that he can fulfil at last the great [illegible] sure of his heart and make you his wife. He hopes that I can start you. I can't but I must. If you will both be at the church when everything is arranged, I will marry you—at last."

Cookie looked at the Vicar for a moment dully, then she took several creeping steps across the room towards him, and caught up his hand between both her own

"Oh, my dear!" she said "oh, my dear!" Then, with the tears welling out of her eyes, she turned to Jennings and burst into a cackling laugh. "Here's a [illegible]al" she said "Oo'll 'e get to make treacle rolley polley he dotes on so?"

CHAPTER XXVII

Cookie's Wedding—and Hat

OLD Joe Judd was followed to the grave on a Monday, and on a Thursday the same week Cookie was married

It was, so far as East Brenton was concerned and East Brenton was not much concerned with any other place—the wedding of the year. Harry determined to make Cookie's wedding day the red letter day of her life

It was arranged that Cookie should be married from the Vicarage, that the wedding should take place in a marquee set up in the upper meadow, and that Cookie's brother should be asked down from London to give her away. This brother, who drove one of the few remaining two-horse omnibuses from Cricklewood to Hammersmith, and had done so for thirty years, was her one remaining relative.

Cookie invited her own guests to the breakfast, and her list consisted of the Vicar, Mrs. Pemberton, Effie, Archie Graham, Bill (to whom a card was written), Peter Meadows (the brother), Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Higginbottom (Fred Jennings's sister and her husband), Mr. and Mrs. Shaw, gardener at the Manor House and his wife (who gave Cookie a hand twice a week in the kitchen and about the house), Collins (who, being unable to marry Cookie himself, was to act as best man to Jennings), Mr McFall and the other disappointed suitor, big Dick Turner from the brewery.

Helen, Effie and Archie Graham all entered into the affair, with Harry Pemberton, heart and soul. Helen and Effie would have set to in the kitchen to cook the breakfast, but Archie asked to be allowed, as a slight tribute to his friend Cookie, to supply the entire feast. It came over from Rexbridge, with wines and other drinks to match. He also presented Cookie with the money for her dress and hat, and oh what a hat it was in which she finally, fifteen minutes after the cabs from the station arrived at the vicarage, made her appearance. A large, flat, white [illegible]ority heaped up with roses and forget-me-nots fastened with a huge [illegible] glistening with imitation dia[illegible] It will be spoken of in East Bren-

"A woman who lets her daughter struggle through the awakening years of her womanhood is not fit to be a mother."

Jennings rose with an air of agitation

"But, I'm out of work, sir," he cried

"I have provided for that," said Harry

"Provided for that, sir?"

"Yes. I'm going to appoint you steward at the club, so that Cookie may be married at last. The post carries twenty five shillings a week, and a five roomed cottage. You will move into it the day after tomorrow, and start your duties the next day. Have you anything to say?"

The man's fat face was pale, and his voice a little husky. "Nothing, only—thank you, sir!" he said.

"I know that you are honest and sober, and will do your work well. I want you to realize, however, that I am not giving you a good, permanent job for your own sake. I am giving it to you for Cookie's sake, Cookie," he called.

"Yuss."

"I want you."

"I'm a comin'."

Cookie ran in and drew up short. She glanced from her man to her master and back again. Her hands fluttered and her breath came quickly.

"Oh!" she said. "You 'ave been a-quarrellin'."

"Ladies and gentlemen," he said, "charge your glasses for a toast. I am not going to ask you to drink the health of Mrs. Frederick Jennings, for, by that name, if she lives to a hundred and two, she will never be known to me or to any of her old and affectionate friends. I am going to ask you to drink a toast with which I couple the name of the bridegroom, wishing great happiness and many years of continued cheerfulness, generosity and optimism to that dear woman who was, go through life as Cookie." (Loud cheers.)

The babble of tongues, the clatter of knives and forks, and the popping of corks went on unceasingly until the Vicar rose to his feet. Then there was a cheer and silence

Fred Jennings stood upon his feet, breathing loudly. There was another cheer. But Cookie put out her hand and pulled him down. She rose and remained standing silently, until the burst of applause subsided

"Dear Master," she said—"dear Master"——

She got no further. She stood for a moment quite still. Then she sat down, and bent her head over her plate.

But Fred Jennings spoke, and so did Mr. MacFall. Dick Turner made a really excellent comparison between Cookie and fine old ale—Cookie's scream of laughter nearly tore the tent—and Peter Meadows remarked with the faintest touch of bitterness, that no motor, clatterin' and stinkin', would put her off the road."

And in the kitchen, Cookie's kitchen, listening to the cheer and laughter, the new cook sat. She was a girl with golden hair and big blue eyes and a hole in her heart.

FIRST CHAPTER

"OUT of the depths, O Lord, out of the depths,' begins the most beautiful of the services of our church, and it is out of the depths of my life that I must bring the incidents of this story.

I was an unwanted child—unwanted as a girl at all events. Father Dan Donovan, our parish priest, told me all about it. I was born in October. It had been raining heavily all day long. The rain was beating hard against the front of our house and running in rivers down the window-panes. Toward [illegible] the wind arose and then the yellow leaves of the chestnuts in the long drive rustled noisily, and the sea, which is a mile away, moaned like a dog in pain.

In my father's room, on the ground floor, Father Dan sat by the fire, fingering his beads and listening to every sound that came from my mother's room, w[illegible] immediately overhead [illegible] heavy step [illegible] tremble [illegible] from the [illegible] the ingle to the opposite wall, sometimes Aunt Bridget came down to say that [illegible] well, and [illegible] Doctor Conrad [illegible] less way [illegible] took a few puffs from a long clay pipe and then returned to his charge upstairs.

My father's impatience was consuming him.

"It's long," he said, searching the doctor's face.

"Don't [illegible] worry," [illegible]

There's no [illegible]

"Then [illegible]," said my father. "It will be five hundred dollars to you if this comes off all right."

I think my father was a great man at that time. I think he is still a great man. Hard [illegible] cruel as he may have been to me, I feel bound to say that for him. If he had been born a king, he would have made his nation feared and perhaps respected throughout the world. He was born a peasant, the poorest of peasants, a crofter. The little homestead of his family, with its whitewashed walls and straw-thatched roof, still stands on the bleak [illegible]lands of [illegible] and said

"Never [illegible] boy. You shall have [illegible] when I am a man, and then nobody shall never insult you."

My mother [illegible] years of age [illegible] a large-limbed, lusty-lunged [illegible] almost a stranger to education but with an unconquerable will, so he strapped his chest and emigrated to America. What work he found [illegible] I never rightly knew. I can only remember to have heard that it was something dangerous to human life and that the hands above him dropped off rapidly. Within two years he was a foreman. Within five years he was a partner. In ten years he was a rich man. At the end of five-and-twenty years he was a millionaire, controlling trusts and corporations and carrying out great combines.

I once heard him say that the money tumbled into his chest like crushed oats out of a crown shaft, but what happened at last was never fully explained to me. Something I heard of a collision with the law [illegible] that at forty-five [illegible] returned to Ellan [illegible] then a changed man, with a hard tongue, a stern mouth, and a master[illegible] the eyebrows. His passion [illegible] left its mark upon [illegible] flood, and the people who had made game of his father came crawling to his feet like cockroaches.

The first thing he did on coming home was to buy up his mother's croft, re-thatch the old house, and put in a poor person to take care of it.

[illegible] His next [illegible] that Captain O'Neil had fallen deeply into debt, he bought up the braggart's mortgages, turned him out of the Big House, and took up his own abode in it.

Twelve months later he made amends, after his own manner, by marrying one of the Captain's daughters. There were two of them. Isabel, the elder, was a gentle and beautiful girl, very delicate, very timid, and most sweet when most submissive, like the woodland herbs which give out their sweetest fragrance when they are trodden on and crushed. Bridget, the younger, was rather homely, rather common, proud of her strength of mind and will.

MARRIED ELDER SISTER.

To the deep chagrin of the younger sister, my father selected the elder [illegible] mother's wishes were consulted. Her father and my father dealt with the marriage as a question of business, and that was an end of the matter [illegible] cant. He signed the parish register in the name of Daniel O'Neill by right of Letters Patent, and on taking his bride back to her early home, he hoisted over the tower of his chill grey house the stars and stripes of his once adopted country stitched to the flag of his native island. He had talked less than "Neale the Lord," but he had thought and acted more.

Two years passed without offspring, and my father made no disguise of his disappointment, which almost amounted to disgust. Hitherto he had occupied himself with improvements in his house and estate, but now his restless energies required a wider field, and he began to look about him. Ellan was then a primitive place, and its inhabitants, half landsmen, half seamen, were a simple pious race living in a sweet poverty which rarely descended into want. But my father had magnificent schemes for it. By push, energy and enterprise he would galvanise the island into life, build hotels, theatres, casinos, drinking halls and dancing palaces, lay out race-courses, construct electric railways to the tops of the mountains, and otherwise transform the place into a holiday resort for the people of the United Kingdom.

"We'll just sail in and make this old island hum," he said, and a number of his neighbors, nothing loth [illegible] advocates, bankers and [illegible] councillors—joined hands with him in his adventurous schemes.

But hardly had he begun when a startling incident happened. The old Lord Raa of Castle Raa, head of the O'Neills, the same that had sworn at my grandmother, after many years in which he had lived a bad life abroad where he had contracted fatal maladies, returned to Ellan to die. Being a bachelor, his heir would have been Captain O'Neill, but my mother's father had died during the previous Winter, and in the absence of direct male issue it seemed likely that both title and inheritance (which, by the conditions of an old patent, might have descended to the nearest living male through the female line) would go to a distant relative, a boy, fourteen years of age, a Protestant, who was then at school at Eton.

UNEXPECTED [illegible]PENS.

More than [illegible]ow my father chewed the c[illegible] great disappointment. [illegible] unexpected that oftenest [illegible] one day in the Spring, Dr. Conrad, being called to see my mother, who was indisposed, announced that she was about to bear a child.

My father's delight was almost delirious, though at first his happiness was tempered by the fear that the child that was to be born to him [illegible] not prove a boy. Even this danger disappeared from his mind after a time, and before long his vanity and [illegible] began to speak of his unborn child as a son, just as if the birth of a male child had been prearranged. With my mother, with Dr. Conrad, and above all with Father Dan, he sometimes went the length of discussing his son's name. It was to be Hugo, because that had been the name of the heads of the O'Neills through all the ages, as far back as the legendary days in which, as it was believed, they had been the Kings of Ellan.

My mother was no less overjoyed. She had justified herself at last, and if she was happy enough at the beginning in the tingling delight of the woman who is about to know the sweetest of human joys, the joy of bearing a child, she acquiesced at length in the accepted idea that her child would be a boy. Perhaps she was moved to this merely by a desire to submit to her husband's will, and to realize his hopes and expectations. Or perhaps she had another reason, a secret reason, a reason that came of her own weakness and timidity as a woman, namely, that the man child to be born of her would be strong and brave and free.

All went well down to the end of autumn, and then alarming news came from Castle Raa. The old lord had developed some further malady and was believed to be sinking rapidly. Doctor Conrad was consulted and he gave it as his opinion that the patient could not live beyond the year. This threw my father into a fever of anxiety. Sending for his advocate, he took counsel both with him and with Father Dan.

"Come now, let us get the hang of this business," he said; and when he realized that (according to the terms of the ancient Patent) if the old lord died before his child was born, his high-built hopes would be in the dust, his eagerness became a consuming fire.

A RACE OF SOULS.

For the first time in his life his excitement took forms of religion and benevolence. He promised that if everything went well he would give a new altar to Our Lady's Chapel in the parish church of St. Mary, a ton of coals to every poor person within a radius of five miles, and a supper to every inhabitant of the neighbouring village who was more than sixty years of age. It was even rumoured that he went so far in secret as to provide funds for the fireworks with which some of his flatterers were to celebrate the forthcoming event, and that one form of illumination was a gigantic frame which set upon the Sky Hill, immediately in front of our house, was intended to display in brilliant lights the glowing words "God Bless the Happy Heir." Certain[illegible] the birth was [illegible] announced by the ringing of the big bell of the tower as signal to the country round about that the appointed festivities [illegible] begin.

[illegible] October, news came from Castle Raa by secret channels. Morning by morning, Doctor Conrad was sent for to see my mother. Never had the sun looked down on a more gruesome spectacle. It was a race between the angel of death and the angel of life, with my father's masterful soul between, struggling to keep back the one and to hasten on the other.

My father's impatience affected everybody about him. Especially it communicated itself to the person chiefly concerned. The result was just what might have been expected. My mother was brought to bed prematurely, a full month before her time.

"I was always fond of music, and mother used to teach me to sing, to a little upright piano, which she was allowed to keep in her room."

Second Chapter.

BY six o'clock the wind had risen to the force of a hurricane. The last of the withered leaves of the trees in the drive had fallen and the bare branches were beating together like bundles of rods. The sea was louder than ever, and the bell on St. Mary's Rock, a mile away from the shore, was tolling like a knell under the surging of the waves. Sometimes the clashing of the rain against the window-panes was like the wash of billows over the port-holes of a ship at sea.

"Pity for the poor folk with their fireworks," said Father Dan.

"They'll eat their suppers for all that," said my father.

It was now dark, but my father would not allow the lamps to be lighted. There was therefore no light in his gaunt room except a sullen glow from the fire of peat and logs. Sometimes, in a momentary lull of the storm, an intermittent moan would come from the room above, followed by a dull hum of voices.

"Guess it can't be long now," my father would say.

"Praise the Lord," Father Dan would answer.

By 7 the storm was at its height. The roaring of the wind in the wide chimney was as loud as thunder. Save for this the thunderous noise of the sea served to drown all sounds on the land. Nevertheless, in the midst of the clamor a loud rapping was heard at the front door. One of the maid-servants would have answered it, but my father called her back and, taking up a lantern, went to the door himself. As quietly as he could for the rush of wind without, he opened it, and pulling it after him, he stepped into the porch.

A man in livery was there on horseback, with another saddled horse beside him. He was drenched through, but steaming with sweat as if he had ridden long and hard. Shouting above the roar of the storm, he said.

"Doctor Conrad is here, is he?"

"He is—what of it?" said my father.

"Tell him he's wanted and must come away with me at once."

"Who says he must?"

"Lord Raa. His lordship is dangerously ill. He wishes to see the doctor immediately."

A CLASH OF WILLS

I think my father must [illegible] through a moment of fierce conflict between his desire to keep the old lord alive and his hope of the immediate birth of his offspring. But his choice was quickly made.

"Tell the lord," he cried, "that a woman is here in childbirth, and until she's delivered the doctor cannot come to him."

"But I've brought a horse, and the doctor is to go back with me."

"Give the lord my message and say it is Daniel O'Neill who sends it."

"But his lordship is dying and unless the [illegible] is there to help him, he may not live till morning."

"Unless the doctor is here to deliver my wife, my child may be dead before midnight."

"What is the birth of your child to the death of his lordship?" cried the man; but, before the words were well out of his mouth, my father, in his great strength, had laid hold of the reins and swung both horse and rider round about.

"Get yourself to the other side of my gate, or I'll fling you into the road," he cried; and then, returning to the porch, he re-entered the house and clashed the door behind him.

Father Dan used to say that for some moments more the groom from Castle Raa could be heard shouting the name of the doctor to the lighted windows of my mother's room. But his voice was swirled away in the whistling of the wind, and after a while the hoofs of his horses went champing over the gravel in the direction of the gate.

When my father returned to his room, shaking the rain from his hair and beard, he was fuming with indignation. Perhaps a memory of forty years ago was seething in his excited brain.

"The old scoundrel," he said. "He'd like it, wouldn't he? They'd all like it! Which of them wants a son of mine amongst them?"

The roaring night outside became yet more terrible. So loud was the noise from the shore that it was almost as if a wild beast were trying to liberate itself from the womb of the sea. At one moment Aunt Bridget came downstairs to say that the storm was frightening my mother. All the servants of the house were gathered in the hall, full of fear, and telling each other superstitious stories.

A CHILD'S CRY

Suddenly there came a lull. Rain and wind seemed to cease in an instant. The clamor of the sea became less and the tolling of the bell on St. Mary's Rock died away in the distance. It was almost as if the world, which had been whirling through space, suddenly stood still.

In that moment of silence a deeper [illegible] than usual came from the room overhead. My father dropped into a chair, clasped his hands and closed his eyes. Father Dan rattled his pearl beads and moved his lips, but uttered no sound.

Then a faint sound came from the room overhead. My father opened his eyes and listened. Father Dan held his breath. The sound was repeated, but louder, clearer, shriller than before. There could be no mistaking it now. It was Nature's eternal signal that out of the womb of silence a living soul had been born into the world.

"It's over," said my father.

"Glory be to God and all the saints," said Father Dan.

"That'll beat 'em," cried my father, and he leapt to his feet and laughed.

Going to the door of the room, he flung it open. The servants in the hall were now whispering eagerly, and one of them, the gardener, Tom Dug, commonly called Tommy the Mate, stepped out and asked if he ought to ring the bell.

"Certainly," said my father. "Isn't that what you've been standing by for?"

A few minutes later the bell of the tower began to ring, and it was followed almost immediately by the bell of our parish church, which rang out a merry peal.

"That'll beat 'em, I say," cried my father, and laughing in his triumph he tramped the flagged floor with a firmer step than ever.

All at once the crying of the child ceased and there was a confused rumble of voices overhead. My father stopped, his face straightened, and his voice, which had rung out like a horn, wheezed back like a whistle.

"What's going doing? Where's Conrad? Why doesn't Conrad come to me?"

"Don't worry. He'll be down presently," said Father Dan.

A few minutes passed, in which nothing was said and nothing heard, and then, unable to bear the suspense any longer, my father went to the foot of the staircase and shouted the doctor's name.

DISAPPOINTED

A moment later the doctor's footsteps were heard on the stone stairs. They were hesitating, halting, dragging footsteps. Then the doctor entered my father's room. Even in the sullen light of the peat fire his face was white, ashen white. He did not speak at first, and there was an instant of silence, dead silence. Then my father said:

"Well, what is it?"

"It is——"

"Speak, man! Do you mean it is—dead?"

"No! Oh, no! Not that."

"What then?"

"It is a girl."

"A girl! Did you say a girl?"

"Yes."

"My God!" said my father, and he dropped back into the chair. His lips were parted, and his eyes, which had been blazing with joy, became fixed on the dying fire in a stupid stare.

Father Dan tried to console him. There were thistles in everybody's crop, and after all it was a good thing to have begotten a girl. Girls were the flowers of life, the joy and comfort of man in his earthly pilgrimage, and many a father who bemoaned his fate when a daughter had been born to him had lived to thank the Lord for her.

All this time the joy bells had been ringing, and now the room began to be illuminated by fitful flashes of variegated light from the firework-frame on the top [illegible] (as well as it could for [illegible] had soaked it) was sputtering [illegible] mocking legend, "God [illegible] py Heir."

In his soft Irish voice, which was like a river running over smooth stones, Father Dan went on with his comforting.

"Yes, women are the salt of the earth, God bless them, and when I think of what they suffer that the world may go on, that the generations may not fail, I feel as if I want to go down [illegible] kiss the feet [illegible] meet in the street. What would the world be without women? Think of St. Theresa! Think of the blessed Margaret Mary! Think of the Holy Virgin herself!"

"Oh, stow this [illegible] father," and leaping [illegible] began to curse [illegible]

"Stop that [illegible] fool going to ring [illegible] those damnable lights [illegible] out. Are the devils of [illegible] to laugh at me?"

With that, and an oath at himself for his folly, my father strode out of the room.

My mother had heard him. Through the unceiled timbers of the first floor between them the words of his rage had reached her. She was ashamed. She felt as if she were a guilty thing, and with a low cry of pain she turned to the wall and fainted.

The old lord died the same night. Somewhere towards the dead reaches of the dawn his [illegible] to its reckoning [illegible] wards the new Lord [illegible] on Eton Jacket, [illegible] possession of [illegible]

But long [illegible] scoring out [illegible] an account [illegible] to work with [illegible] and insular councillors [illegible] schemes for galvanizing [illegible] into new life.

Third Chapter

OUT of [illegible] own [illegible] from [illegible] comes first the recollection of a big room containing a big bed, a big wardrobe, a big dressing table, a big praying stool with an image of Our Lady on the wall above it and an open window to which [illegible] to come in the morn[illegible]

When I came to [illegible] mother's room, and that the sweet somebody who used to catch me up in her arms when I went totte[illegible] voyages of discovery round [illegible] place was my mother [illegible] that she would [illegible] fell, and stroke my head, [illegible] thin white hand, while she sang softly and [illegible]

As I have [illegible] having seen my mother in any other part of our house, or [illegible] other place except [illegible] we drove out in th[illegible] clude that from the time of my birth she had been an invalid.

Certainly the faces which first emerge from the islands of my memory are the cheerful and sunny ones of Doctor Conrad and Father Dan. I recall the soft voice of the one as he used to enter our room after breakfast saying, "How are we this morning, ma'am?" And I remember too still softer voice of the other as he said, "And how is my daughter today?"

I loved both of them [illegible] Father Dan, who used to call me his Nanny and say I was the plague and pet of his life, being as full of mischief as a goat. He [illegible] an old child himself [illegible] recollection of him [illegible] ter confessing my mother, he would go down on all fours with me on the floor and play at hide-and-seek around the legs of the big bed, amid squeals and squeaks of laughter. I remember, too, that he wore [illegible] sack coat which buttoned close [illegible] neck and hung loose at the [illegible] where there were two large [illegible] pockets, and that these pock[illegible] my cupboards and drawers, for I put my toys and my dolls and even the remnants of my cakes into them to be kept in safe custody until wanted again.

My mother called me Mally veen (Mary dear), and out of love of her only child she must have weaned me late, for I have vague memories of her soft white breasts filled with milk. I slept in a little wickerwork cot placed near her bed, so that she could reach me if I uncovered myself in the night. She used to say I was like a bird, having something birdlike in my small dark head and the way I held it up. Certainly I remember myself as a swift little thing, always darting to and fro on tiptoe, and chirping about our chill and rather cheerless house.

If I was like a bird my mother was like a flower. Her head, which was small and fair, and her face, which was nearly always tinged with color, drooped forward from her delicate body like a rose from its stalk. She was generally dressed in black, I remember, but she wore a white lace collar as well as a coif such as we see in old pictures, and when I call her back to my mind, with her large liquid eyes and her sweet soft mouth, I think it cannot be my affection alone, or the magic of my childish memory, which makes me think, after all these years and all the countries I have travelled in, and all the women I have seen, that my darling mother, though so little known and so little loved, was the most beautiful woman in the world.

Even yet I cannot but wonder that other people, my father especially, did not see her with my eyes. I think he was fond of her after his own fashion, but there was a kind of involuntary contempt in his affection, which could not conceal itself from my quick little eyes. She was visibly afraid of him, and was always nervous and timid when he came into our room with his customary salutation.

"How now, Isabel? And how's this child of yours?"

From my earliest childhood I noticed that he [illegible] spoke of me as if I had been my mother's child not his, and perhaps this affected my feeling for him from the first.

I [illegible] of his loud voice and rough manner, the big bearded man with the [illegible] and the smell of [illegible] about [illegible] mother's womb.

My earliest recollections are of his muffled shout from the room below: "Keep your child quiet, will you?" when I was disturbing him over his papers by leaping and skipping about the floor. If he came upstairs when I was in bed I would dive under the bedclothes, as a duck dives [illegible] to the surface [illegible] never kissed my father or climbed on to his knee, and that during his short visits to our room I used to hold my breath and hide my head behind my [illegible]

A MOTHER'S EFFORTS

[illegible] of my father [illegible] to reconcile him to my existence. Some of her innocent schemes, as I recall them now, seem very sweet but very pitiful. She took pride, for instance, in my hair, which was jet black even when I was a child, and she used to part it in the middle and brush it smooth over my forehead in the manner of the Madonna, and one day when my father was with us, she drew me forward [illegible]

"Don't you think our Mary is going [illegible] a little like th[illegible] perhaps—do [illegible]

[illegible] father laughed [illegible] the Virgin [illegible]

"A voice, has she? [illegible] angels is it? What next, I wonder."

My mother made most of my clothes. There was no need for her [illegible] in an old pattern book of colored prints, which left the legs and neck [illegible]

[illegible] more contemptuously and replied:

"Her grandmother weeded turnips [illegible]"

[illegible] the image of the Virgin [illegible] I heard her tell my father that when I was a little mite, scarcely able to speak, she found me kneeling in my cot with my doll perched up before me, moving my lips as if saying my prayers and looking up at the ceiling with a rapt expression.

"But she has always had such [illegible] religious eyes, and I shouldn't wonder [illegible] a nun some day."

"A nun, eh? Maybe so. But I take no stock in the nun business anyway," said my father.

Whereupon my mother's lips moved as if she were saying "No, dearest," but her dear, sweet pride was crushed and she could go no farther.

Fourth Chapter

THERE was a whole colony of [illegible] the ground floor of our house who, like my father, could not reconcile th[illegible] to my existence [illegible]

[illegible] Colonel MacLeod, a middle-aged officer on half-pay, a widower [illegible] fast Irishman, and a tavern companion of my maternal grandfather. But the Colonel had died within a year, leaving Aunt Bridget with one child of her own, a girl, as well as a daughter of his wife by the former marriage. As this happened about the time of my birth, when it became obvious that my mother was to be an invalid, my father invited Aunt Bridget to come to his house as housekeeper, and she came, and brought her children with her.

Her rule from the outset had been as hard as might have been expected from one who prided herself on her self-command—a quality that covered everybody, including my mother and me, and was only subject to softening in favor of her own offspring.

Aunt Bridget's own daughter, a year older than myself, was a fair child with light gray eyes, round cheeks of the color of ripe apples, and long yellow hair that was carefully combed and curled. Her name was Betsy, which was extended by her mother to Betsy Beauty. She was usually dressed in a muslin frock with a sash of light blue ribbon, and being understood to be delicate was [illegible] and nearly always eating, and giving herself generally the airs of the daughter of the house.

Aunt Bridget's stepdaughter, ten years older, was a gaunt, ungainly girl with red hair and irregular features. Her name was Nessy [illegible] having an instinct [illegible] dependent position [illegible] humble and subservient and [illegible] Tommy the Mate used to say "as smooth as an old threepenny bit" to the ruling powers, which always meant my aunt, but spiteful, insolent, and acrid to anybody who was outside my aunt's favor, which usually meant me.

Between my cousin and myself there were constant feuds, in which Nessy MacLeod never failed to take the side of Betsy Beauty, while my poor mother became a target for the shafts of Aunt Bridget, who said I was a wilful, wicked, underhand little vixen, and no wonder, seeing how disgracefully I was indulged and how shockingly I ... brought up.

A FOOLISH CLIMAX

These skirmishes ... considerable ... without ... consequences, but they came ... to a foolish climax which had ... results. [illegible]

... gleams of sunshine, and flowers were a ... joy to her. [illegible] But one day ... could not do so, being ... of the Carragh, cutting peat ... fires. Therefore I undertook to supply the deficiency, having already with the large solemnity of six, begun to consider it my duty to take charge of my mother.

"Never mind, mammy, I'll ... some slowers sor wou," I said (every l being an s in those days), and armed with a pair of scissors I skipped down to the garden.

I had chosen a bed of annuals because they were bright and fragrant and was beginning to cut some "gil-ers" when Nessy MacLeod, who had been watching from a window, came pouncing down on me.

"Mary O'Neill, how dare you ..." Nessy. "You wilful, wicked, underhand little vixen, what will your Aunt Bridget say? Don't you know this is Betsy Beauty's bed ... nobody else is to touch it?"

I began to excuse myself on the ground of my mother and Tommy the Mate, but Nessy would hear no such explanation.

"Your mamma has nothing to do with it. You know quite well that your Aunt Bridget manages everything in this house, and nothing can be done without her."

Small as I was that was too much for me. Somewhere in my little heart there had long been a secret pang of mortified pride—how born I do not know—at seeing Aunt Bridget take the place of my mother and now, choking with vexation but without saying a word, I swept off the heads of all the flowers in the bed, and with my arms full of them—ten times more than I wanted—I sailed back to my mother's room.

TAKEN FROM MOTHER

Inside two minutes there was a fearful tumult. I thought I was doomed to punishment when I heard the big bunch of keys, which Aunt Bridget kept suspended from her waist, come jingling up the stairs but it was my poor mother who paid the penalty.

"Isabel," cried Aunt Bridget, "I hope you are satisfied with your child at last."

"What has Mary been doing now, sister?" said my mother.

"Don't ask me what she has been doing. You know quite well, or if you don't you ought to."

My mother glanced at the flowers and she seemed to understand what had happened, for her face fell and she said submissively

"Mary has done wrong but I am sure she is sorry and will never do it again."

"Sorry, indeed!" cried my aunt. "Not she sorry. And she'll do it again at the very next opportunity. The vixen! The little wilful, underhand vixen! But what wonder if children go wrong when their own mothers neglect to correct them!"

"I daresay you are quite right, dear Bridget—you are always right," said my mother in a low, grave voice. "But then I'm not very well, and Mary is all I have, you know."

My mother was in tears by this time, but Aunt Bridget was not content with her triumph. Sweeping downstairs she carried her complaint to my father, who ordered that I was to be taken out of my mother's charge on the ground that she was incapable of attending to my upbringing—a task which, being assigned to my Aunt Bridget, provided that I should henceforward live on the ground floor, and eat oaten cake and barley bonnag and sleep alone in the cold room over the hall, while Betsy Beauty ate wheaten bread and apple tart and slept with her mother in the room over the kitchen, in which they always kept a fire.

Fifth Chapter.

THE altered arrangements were a cause of grief to my mother but I am bound to confess that for me they had certain compensations. One of them was the greater ease with which I could slip out to Tommy the Mate, who had been a ... before he was a gardener, and was still ... the old salt, with grizzled hair, ... shaggy eyebrows, and a ... twinkle in what he called his "starboard" eye.

I think Tommy was one of the few ... in my father's house who were really fond of me, but perhaps that ... because he loathed Aunt Bridget. He used to call her the Big Woman ... that she was mas... mistress of everything and ... about the place. When ... told of any special piece of ... to servant or farmband ... used to say: "Aw, well, she'll die ..." and when he heard how she ... separated me from my mother ... nothing else to love or live ... spat sideways out of his mouth and said

"... Big Woman is a wicked devil ... thinking, and I wouldn't trust (I wouldn't wonder) but she'll burn in h..."

What definite idea I attached to this denunciation I do not now recall, but I remember that it impressed me deeply, and that many a night afterwards, during the miserable half-hours before I fell asleep with my head under the clothes in the cold bedroom over the hall to which (as Nessy MacLeod had told me) the bad fairies came for bad children, I repeated the strange words again and again.

Another compensation was the greater opportunity I had for cultivating an acquaintance which I had recently made with the doctor's son, when he came with his father on visits to my mother. As soon as the hoofs of the horse were heard on the gravel and before the bell could be rung I used to dart away on tiptoe ... through the porch, climb into the gig and help the boy to hold the reins while his father was upstairs.

This led to what I thought a great discovery. It was about my mother. I had always known my mother was sick but now I got a "skute" (as old Tommy used to say) into the cause of her illness. It was a matter of milk. The doctor's boy had heard his father saying so. If my mother could only have milk morning, noon and night, every day and all day, "there wouldn't be nothing the matter with her."

A QUARREL.

This, too, impressed me deeply, and the form it took in my mind was that "mammy wasn't sed enough," a conclusion that gained colour from the fact that I was Betsy Beauty perched up in a high chair in the dining room twice or thrice a day, drinking ... warm milk fresh from the cow. We had three cows. I remembered and to correct the mischief of my mother's illness, I determined that henceforth she should not have merely ... of our milk—she should have all of it.

Losing no time in carrying my intentions into effect, I crept into the dairy as soon as the dairymaid had ... in the afternoon's milking. There it was, still frothing and bubbling in three great bowls, and taking up the first of them in my little thin arms—goodness knows how—I made straight for my mother's room.

But hardly had I climbed half-way up the stairs, puffing and panting under my burden, when I met Nessy MacLeod coming down, and she fell on me with her usual reproaches.

"Mary O'Neill, you wilful, underhand little vixen, whatever are you doing with the milk?"

Being in no mood for explanations I tried to push past, but Nessy prevented me.

"No, indeed, you shan't go a step further. What will your Aunt Bridget say? Take the milk back, miss, this very minute."

Nessy's loud protest brought Betsy Beauty out of the dining room, and in a moment, my cousin, looking more than ever like a painted doll in her white muslin dress with a large blue bow in her yellow hair, had run upstairs to assist her step-sister.

I was now between the two, the one above and the other below, and they laid hold of my bowl to take it from me. They tugged and I resisted and there was a struggle in which the milk was in danger of being spilled.

"She's a stubborn little thing and she ought to be whipped," cried Nessy.

"She's stealing my milk, and I'll tell mamma," said Betsy.

"Tell her then," I cried, and in a burst of anger at finding myself unable to recover control of my bowl I swept it around and flung the contents over my AUNT BRIDGET'S ANGER.

Of course there was a fearful scene. Betsy Beauty shrieked and Nessy bawled, whereupon Aunt Bridget came racing from her parlour ... mother, ... and trembling hurried to find ...

"M... Mally, what have you done?" cried ..., but Aunt Bridget found no need of questions. After running up stairs to her dripping daughter, wiping her down with a handkerchief, calling her "my poor darling," and saying "Didn't I tell you to have nothing more to do with that little vixen?" she fell on my mother with bitter upbraidings.

"Isabel, I hope you see now what your ... of a child is—the spiteful fury!"

By this time I had dropped my empty bowl on the stairs and taken refuge behind my mother's gown, but I heard her timid voice trying to excuse me, and saying something about my cousin and a ...

"Childish quarrel, indeed!" cried my Aunt, "there's nothing childish about that little imp, nothing. And what's more, I shall be obliged to you, Isabel, if you will never again have the assurance to speak of my Betsy Beauty in the same breath with a child of yours."

That was more than I could bear. My little heart was afire at the humiliation put upon my mother. So stepping out to the head of the stairs, I shouted down in my shrillest treble

"Your Betsy Beauty is a wicked devil, and I wouldn't trust but she'll burn in hell!"

Never, to the last hour of my life, shall I forget the effect of that pronouncement. One moment Aunt Bridget stood speechless in the middle of the stairs, as if all breath had been broken out of her. Then, ghastly white and without a word, she came flying up at me, and, before I could recover my usual refuge, she caught me, slapped me on the cheek and boxed both my ears.

MUST GO TO SCHOOL.

I do not remember if I cried, but I know my mother did, and that in the midst of the general tumult my father came out of his room and demanded in a loud voice, which seemed to shake the whole house, to be told what was going on.

Aunt Bridget told him, with various embellishments, which my mother did not attempt to correct, and then, knowing she was in the wrong, she began to wipe her eyes with her wet handkerchief, and to say ... [illegible]

Do You Wish the Advice of a Master Designer?

As a creator of fashions Paul Poiret is ahead of his time, but never so far ahead as to be out of reach. Poiret's art is essentially practical. It is just this element that makes Harper's Bazar so valuable to the woman who desires to be smartly gowned.

There appears each month an article from the pen of M. Poiret himself. Poiret writes under an exclusive contract and you may find his authoritative fashion suggestions only in the Bazar.

CORT JOINS FORCES WITH SELWYN & CO. IN HIS NEW THEATRE IN PARK SQUARE

Aggressive Producing Firm Acquires an Interest in the Playhouse

By NICHOLAS YOUNG.

As the time for the opening of the new Cort Theatre in Park Square approaches the interesting news is passed along that John Cort has disposed of a part interest in the new house to Selwyn & Co., whose producing operations are growing more extensive each season.

If the work on the Cort progresses at its present pace, it will not be more than a month before playgoers will begin taking actual measure of the new theatre and its attractions, for the building has now reached the stage where only the finishing touches are needed to make it a fully equipped theatre, ready for business.

In turning over to Selwyn & Co. an interest in this property, Mr. Cort is unquestionably doing the house a splendid service, for it will put the theatre in touch with the producing operations of one of the most aggressive firms in the field. If plans for the future go through without more than the ordinary disappointments, Selwyn & Co.'s productions are likely to be desirable for any theatre, and if you add to these the plays that Mr. Cort and his own immediate associates produce, there should be very bright prospects for the Cort Theatre.

Since entering the producing field, Selwyn & Co. have given playgoers "Within the Law," the most sensational success the stage has had for ten years, and to bring the work of the firm closer to Boston it may be said that their newest play, "Under Cover," now playing at the Plymouth, threatens to maintain the pace already set by its lively predecessor.

It seems to be a rather settled fact that after February 1 the Boston Theatre will cease to be the home of visiting syndicate attractions. The five years that Frohman & Harris have directed the affairs of that house have not yielded sufficient financial results to make the venture worth while, but they have had in keeping its stage occupied by strong attractions. The withdrawal of Mr Frohman and Mr. Harris from the management of the Boston will cause neither gentleman a pang or heartache.

When B. F. Keith leased the Boston Theatre to representatives of the theatrical syndicate there was more spirited competition in downtown dramatic entertainment than there is today. At that time the syndicate and Shuberts were at each other's throat, and the capture of the Boston Theatre was more of a measure to keep the Shuberts from spreading than it was a plan to bring heavy reward to its lessees. But the fight is now ended, and the Shubert and the syndicate forces, in so far as it concerns Boston, are playing each other's game to some extent. Under these circumstances there is no need for the Boston Theatre, and, consequently, it will be discarded.

The threatened increase in the rent of the Park Theatre at the termination of the present lease is also causing rare speculation about the future of that house. The Park has been a successful theatre, but its success has largely depended upon its economical operation. Whether a greatly increased expense of operation will make it attractive to its present lessees is an open question.

To add to the complications, the new Cort and Wilbur theatres will open before [illegible] which will naturally bring fresh competition to [illegible] other theatres withdraw from the organized theatrical combinations. It is more than possible that before the end of the present season many alterations will be made in the local theatrical map.

❧ ❧ ❧ ❧ ❧ ❧

"Oh! Oh! Delphine," the first of the new year's attractions at the Colonial, is the second Klaw & Erlanger production to descend upon us this season. The piece had a happy engagement in New York, and should have it wide popularity. Although its music has been proclaimed perfect, from the standpoint of light musical comedy, and the costuming faultless, a great deal of stress is laid upon the natural beauty of the chorus, the ranks of which, it is said, are filled with the cream of the Broadway stock.

Of course, fine clothes make fine women, as you will see when "Oh! Oh! Delphine" unfolds its gorgeous costuming tomorrow evening, but if you can believe the young man who boosts for the show, not even the brilliant plumage of the girls in the company can add to their seductive charms. With such an indorsement, the piece should have no difficulty in attracting all of the front row regulars, as well as a few volunteers.

WHATEVER else may be said of James Forbes' "The Clever Woman," you are bound to concede to it a full measure of brisk and amusing dialogue. As a play, it will stand a good deal of stretching and pressing into shape, but as an entertainment built around smart sayings by May Robson, it will fit almost any taste.

Mr. Forbes writes better than he builds, which is some consolation, at least, for you must laugh at the furiously funny lines he has given to its absurdities without any trouble at all. There is no escaping the grim humor of Miss Robson's philosophy.

❧ ❧ ❧ ❧ ❧ ❧

"LITTLE WOMEN" promises to be another matinee sensation. With four afternoon performances last week there were not enough seats in the Majestic [illegible] to accommodate all who wanted to buy. There is so much genuine refinement in this dramatization of Louisa M. Alcott's story, and the "little women" are so faithfully reproduced, that the success of the engagement should be taken as a matter of natural consequence.

As Miss Alcott's girls were originally made to be loved by the readers of her book, so are these same girls loved by every playgoer who sees them in the play. One of the real charms of "Little Women" is the true picture it presents of Miss Alcott's story—it is curiously free from the usual alterations indulged in by dramatists when turning fiction into the spoken. "Little Women" should remain at the Majestic for many weeks.

❧ ❧ ❧ ❧ ❧ ❧

WHO says melodrama is dead? If you take a good look at "Under Cover," you will find it making very easy progress at the Plymouth Theatre. It is a play of human people, doing natural things in a natural way, but it has the kick of melodrama that always catches an audience by the ears. And it has a mystery—a very deep mystery—that yields a big surprise in the last ten minutes of the play. No, sirree, melodrama is not dead—it is very much alive and prospering at the Plymouth.

PLAY BILLS

Colonial Theatre.

"Oh! Oh! Delphine" comes to the Colonial Theatre tomorrow evening to begin a limited engagement of the same company that kept the musical comedy going for a year in New York. Ever lavish with the productions, Klaw & Erlanger have been more than prodigal with the mounting and background [illegible] their last word in musical [illegible]. The company, [illegible] stock [illegible], has brought to [illegible] a note of enthusiasm and [illegible] factor, such as even [illegible] have not known in many years.

Frank McIntyre as the [illegible] Bouchette, Grace Edmund as the sprightly Delphine, Scott Welsh as the debonair Victor and Stella Hoban as the intense minute are the principals in an excellent cast.

Tremont Theatre.

Ethel Barrymore in her newest success, "Tante," comes to the Tremont Theatre tomorrow night to stay two weeks. "Tante," a novel by Anne Douglas Sedgwick, has been read by almost everyone—certainly by everyone who tries to keep up with the best in modern fiction. It is a remarkable story of a woman who is a genius not only as a piano player but also in her ability as a trouble-maker and for innate cussedness. C. Haddon Chambers has taken Miss Sedgwick's novel and made a play out of it, and Miss Barrymore impersonates the woman. It is the best part they say, that Miss Barrymore ever had.

Gaiety Theatre.

Attached with the "Hurtig Stamp" of excellence, "The Ginger Girls," with Ed. Lee Wrothe in the foreground, will display this season's offerings at the Gaiety Theatre this week. The worth of the offering has been tested during its long Summer season in Chicago. There is more than one reason why this particular attraction should meet with the general approval of all amusement seekers. Not only is it built on clever comedy situations, but it has also an intense dramatic plot, something rarely ever seen in a burlesque offering. It deals with "Janitor Higgins," the character made famous by Wrothe.

B. F. Keith's Theatre.

"Mercedes," the sensation of London and Paris, who is one of the most remarkable men that the world ever produced, will make his first American appearance at B. F. Keith's Theatre next week. "Mercedes" is described as the monarch of the unknown forces of nature who has harnessed thought transference to music. Every person in the audience has the opportunity of testing "Mercedes'" remarkable powers. Merely think of a musical selection, be it grand opera, ragtime, sacred music, ballads, classic or patriotic airs. Mercedes will transfer your thought suggestion mentally to Mlle Stantone, his assistant, who sits at the piano, and the Mlle. will play the desired selection without a second's hesitation. The prince of fun-makers, Jack Wilson will also be on hand, assisted by Ada Lane and Jack Boyle. A dozen other features will be seen.

Shubert Theatre.

No musical attraction of the season has netted the unstinted praise as has been accorded "The Passing Show of 1913," which enters upon its fourth and last week at the Shubert Theatre tomorrow night. The cast is quite the best assemblage of comedians, singers and dancers yet shown in a Winter garden entertainment. Cooper and Le Maire, Bates and Mollie King, Whiting and Burt, De Haven and Nice, Laura Hamilton and Swan Wood have scored heavily.

Majestic Theatre.

William A. Brady's production of the dramatization of Louisa M. Alcott's "Little Women" at the Majestic has captured all who have seen the play. Sweet, simple, quaint and refreshing is this story of a half century ago and the play proves as charming as the book. For the first three acts of the play, a replica of the Bronson Alcott sitting room in Concord has been used, every detail complete, even to the dish of apples which Grandma Alcott always insists on having on the living room table.

Hollis Street Theatre.

It is regretfully announced that the last two weeks of the delightful musical treat, "The Marriage Market," with Donald Brian as the star, and its splendid cast of other famous artists, starts tomorrow night at the Hollis Street Theatre. Donald Brian has introduced "The Futurist Twirl" to Bostonians, and the consensus of opinion is that it is the first sensational and graceful dancing novelty ever seen here.

Plymouth Theatre.

"Under Cover," a melodrama of smart New York society life playing at the Plymouth Theatre, proves to be all that was promised of it, a drama of mystery, suspense and interest, the story of which leads logically to a climax that is unexpected and thrilling. Selwyn & Company have provided an excellent company of players and it is probable that the play will have a long and prosperous run in Boston.

Park Theatre.

May Robson, one of the few actresses of the American stage who possess the faculty of carrying an audience to the verge of tears one minute and then having them laughing the next, has scored a decided success at the Park Theatre in the new James Forbes comedy, "The Clever Woman." The piece had its inaugural performance in Boston on last Monday and the press of the city was unanimous in its approval of the offering.

Castle Square Theatre.

"Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," with all its familiar and friendly characters, will be the play at the Castle Square during the coming week. Lovey Mary, Miss Hay, Mr. Stubbins and Mrs. Wiggs herself are veritable creations drawn directly from human nature, and the homely philosophy of the woman who loved all mankind and who made the best of life in the midst of her poverty, has stimulated many a reader and many a theatregoer. The play is made up from two of Alice Hegan Rice's stories, "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" and "Lovey Mary," and it has been a great success, both in this country and in England. On the occasion of its first production in Boston it ran to crowded houses for many months.

Howard Athenaeum.

"The Rector Girls" will be the attraction at the Howard Athenaeum. With this company is Lena Joyce, well known in burlesque circles as the "Little Nightingale." There is a South Boston miss with this organization, Trixie Clarendon by name, who is making a big hit in the burlesque field.

OLD-TIME OPERA STARS ARE PASSING FROM VIEW! WHAT OF THE MUSICAL FUTURE?

Even the Great Singers of the Present Day Have Failed to Catch the Popular Fancy Like Those of the Past

By FREDERICK JOHNS

WHERE are the stars of opera and [illegible] The A[illegible] worships stars [illegible] dying. What is [illegible]

When the [illegible] pany was estab[illegible] fidently a[illegible] an opera [illegible] system would [illegible] the world's [illegible] adequate [illegible]

But [illegible] won't take [illegible] stars, any more than it will drink coffee without sugar, and the Boston Opera Company has had to scurry around to engage celebrated singers, just like all the other opera companies.

And the stars are dying out. For some reason the great singers of this generation [illegible] failed to make the popular appeal that those of the past used to do. There has never been a greater dramatic soprano [illegible] Emmy Destinn, but the pub[illegible] does not seem to apprecia[illegible]

Hempel, B[illegible] Rappold, Fremstad, [illegible] Alvarez, White, Nielsen—all these singers in the height of their powers, as great a group as the old singers—but they do not grip the people.

As Sembrich, Schuman Heink, Nordica, Eames, Calve and Melba have passed, they do not seem to have left successors in the public estimation.

CLING TO OLD FAVORITES.

Opera and concert managers cling desperately to Tetrazzini and Melba and such of the others as are passing their declining days on the concert platform, because they alone can draw.

What is going to happen when the fast thinning ranks of the old stars have all passed by? Will the American people stop going to opera and concerts, or will they accept the [illegible] of the present?

In [illegible] years the modern group of singers will have impressed themselves on the public and as their vocal powers wane their box office strength will increase.

Caruso stands almost alone as the opera singer who draws [illegible] throngs. Melba and [illegible]razzini find grand opera fatiguing, and Geraldine Farrar is in a retirement which may be permanent.

This is a transitional period. It may mean that the future American will go to the opera and concert because he is attracted by the program rather than because the name of a singer draws him, and it may mean something else.

It is a cruel world for the musician who is not fortunate enough or old enough to be a star. The public doesn't take any interest in recitals by instrumentalists or singers who are not celebrated.

CRAVE GOOD MUSIC.

In Boston [illegible] concerts have [illegible] audiences worth [illegible] In New York it is said to be even worse. The concert business in Boston has settled down to a strictly star basis, and stars are hard to get.

In the instrumental world the public is not so hard to satisfy as in grand opera, but you can count on your fingers the violinists and pianists who are sure to attract [illegible]

One of the most hopeful indications is the popularity of the good music put out by the graphophone companies. The records of great artists are reaching all sections of the country and creating in the [illegible] a craving for good [illegible] which will end in increased patronage for opera and concert.

Music of the Week

Well, the Old Gun Went Off on Stage

Marie Illington Tells of Playhouse Episode

I remember some terrible experiences as a beginner on the stage," remarks Miss Marie Illington, who plays the role of Mrs. Beas[illegible] in "The W[illegible]" at the Boston Theatre. "Most of them are amusing enough now, but they were tragedies when they happened.

"One evening, particularly, the cup of tragedy seemed to me to be filled to overflowing. I was in a double bill, playing Cassy in 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' and a piece called 'The Will and the Way.' In the former play, when Cassie surprises Legree in the act of flogging Uncle Tom I was supposed to shoot him. I was apprehensive about my pistol, and I expressed my fears to the stage manager. He told me not to worry, because the prompter would be ready with another [illegible] in case mine missed fire.

"I stood in the doorway with a pistol [illegible] ready for the job. Just as it came the weapon slipped from my nervous fingers and dropped to the floor in the full sight of the audience. A second later the prompter, [illegible] the pistol would not go off, fired his. In the midst of shouts of laughter I ran to my dressing room."

Prima Donnas Are NOT Cranky! No, Sir

[illegible] la Broske, the beautiful prima donna of the "Oh! oh! Delphine" [illegible] denies the canard that prima donnas as a class are either cranky or [illegible]

This Player Has the Sixth Sense

Many learned men believe in the existence of the sixth sense. The late William T. Stead, who gave up his life in the loss of the Titanic, was an ardent believer in mental telepathy. The foremost exponent of this remarkable art—for it must be called an art—is Mercedes, a young Westerner who makes his first appearance in this part of the country at B. F. Keith's Theatre.

Mercedes has succeeded in harnessing thought transference to music in the most amazing fashion. At the opening of his act Mercedes requests the audience to fix their minds upon any selection of music they wish to hear played on the piano by his assistant, Mlle. Stantone. No sooner has the melody dawned on the mind of the auditor, when Mercedes will transfer their thought, mentally, to the mind of his assistant, Mlle. Stantone. With consummate skill she will play the desired selection on the piano.

[illegible] has given exhibitions before the University of Pittsburgh, [illegible] and the governors of [illegible] the mayors of nearly every city he has appeared in.

She Fills Role That's Perfect Fit

It is a curious bit of coincidence that Ethel Barrymore has won her greatest triumph on the stage in "Tante," the comedy by C. Haddon Chambers she brings to the Tremont Theatre tomorrow night. In this play Miss Barrymore impersonates a world famous pianiste and when Miss Barrymore was a young girl it was her uppermost ambition to be one great pianiste.

She was studying with that end in view and had her plans all made to go to Germany and Russia for her finishing courses—when her funds gave out and driven by necessity, she accepted an engagement as understudy to Miss Elsie de Wolfe as Lady Kate Fennel in "The Bauble Shop."

She has never given up her musical studies, however, and when she gets home after the theatre at night it is on a piano stool and not to an easy chair that she gets rid of the strain of the evening's work. And if anyone wants to know the most fascinating of all Ethel Barrymore's the actress must be induced to sit down to the piano with a sheet of [illegible] or of Chopin or even a new piece of ragtime in front of her.

Two Pretty Show Girls

There are two pretty show girls with "The Passing Show of 1913," at the Shubert Theatre, whose opportunities for displaying amazing Paris creations is possibly greater than that of any modern prima donna, and if either Catherine Sainpolis or Gladys Le Roy are ever forced by stress of circumstances to give up the glares of the footlights, there is a field of endeavor open to them in which they would possibly shine with as much lustre as that with which they illumine the theatrical firmament.

Two of the greatest creators of style in women's apparel, M. Paul Poiret and M. Edel, both of Paris, were in New York last Summer.

Arrangements were consummated with M. Edel for gowns for the Hippodrome production of "America," while for "The Passing Show of 1913," M. Poiret made arrangements for the first presentation on the American stage of his famous lamp-shade dresses, which were the sensation of the production of "Le Minaret" in Paris last season.

Both men expressed a desire to take several American models back with them to their Parisian establishments, and the Misses Le Roy and Sainpolis were recommended.

Both became heated rivals for their services and that rivalry has grown so pronounced that hardly an Atlantic liner arrives in port without conveying to them gowns offered as tribute, which excite the envy and admiration of the entire company. If the rivalry continues, and the offers of salary increase, there is a possibility that in the near future the theatrical profession is likely to lose two valuable members.

Miss O'Hare Will Sing at Jordan Hall

Miss Ursula M. O'Hare of No. 71 Fenwood road, Brookline, was selected by Wallace Goodrich, dean of the New England Conservatory of Music, to sing in Jordan Hall Saturday afternoon, January 10. Under Professor Charles Bennett she has made exceptional strides in developing her voice, a mezzo-soprano, which gives much promise.

Amato at Opera Concert

A light and agreeable program has been arranged for the Amato concert at the Boston Opera House tonight. The celebrated baritone of the Metropolitan Opera House has never sung before in this city at less than $5 prices, and he has not yet been heard in concert. He has selected for his numbers the very dramatic prologue to "Pagliacci," the brilliant "Largo al Factotum" from the "Barber of Seville" and a group of Neopolitan songs.

With Amato on the program will be Miss Myrna Sharlow, lyric soprano, who is making her first concert appearance at the Opera House, and Alfredo Ramella, the lyric tenor; Lydia Rienskaja, the Russian contralto, and Alban Grand, the French baritone, will be heard in the "Rigoletto Quartet." The program is as follows:

Overture, Pique Dame	Orchestra.	Suppe
Prologue from "Pagliacci"	Mr. Amato.	Leoncavallo
Jewel Song from "Faust"	Miss Sharlow.	Gounod
Aria from "Tosca" (third act)	Mr. Ramella.	Puccini
Largo al Factotum	Mr. Amato.	Rossini
Meditation of "Thais"	Orchestra.	Massenet
Air from "Elixir of Love"	Mr. Ramella.	Donizetti

Quaint Old Dress Used in Theatres

The quaint old costumes of the Civil War times are to be seen in William A. Brady's production of Louisa May Alcott's immortal story, "Little Women," now on view at the Majestic.

Curiously enough, these old-fashions of half a century ago hold several features which are characteristic of the present-day toggery of woman folks. Then, as now, women wore their hair in a "snood." Today's head dress, however, is made of jewelled net, but the contour of the head dress is almost the same with the part in the middle and the coils at the back of the head.

Jessie Bonstelle, who was responsible for the interesting and correct reproduction of the dress of that day planned the costumes after consulting Mrs. Alice Barber Stevens, whose illustrations appear in "Little Women," the book. Mrs. Stevens made her illustrations from the heirlooms borrowed from the attics of her friends. These relics, together with other prints of the costuming of that period, have been the basis of Miss Bonstelle's clever and very successful

May DeSousa Is from the West

May DeSousa, prima donna of "The Marriage Market," is a western girl, born in Chicago. Her father is [illegible] DeSousa, a prominent politician. She was sent to the Sacred Heart Convent to be educated.

Her first stage appearance was at the old Chicago Opera House, during one of her visits home from the convent. She sang a song called "Dear Midnight of Love" at a benefit performance. Richard Carle heard her and offered her a part in "The Storks." It was in this musical play which was the first attraction of the Majestic Theatre in this city, that Miss DeSousa made her first Boston appearance. Her engagement in "The Marriage Market" is the first that Bostonians have had a chance to renew former acquaintance.

To Appear at the St. James

This afternoon at the St. James, the new symphony orchestra, the Boston Philharmonic Society, Charles Frank, conductor, will give its first public performance in Boston. Mr. Frank has selected this program: Gounod, La Reine de Saba, Verdi, selection from "Rigoletto," Schumann, Traumerei; Liszt, Les Preludes, Greenwald, Chapel Chimes, Humoresque, Wagner, Tannhauser overture.

Although the men in this orchestra, all of whom [illegible] members of the various Boston [illegible] orchestras, have long been playing the great classics for their own enjoyment, Sunday's concert will be their first public appearance.

MUSIC NOTES

The concert at Symphony Hall this afternoon will be the second violin recital by that most admired artist Fritz Kreisler. This will probably be his last appearance of the season in Boston for he is shortly to leave for the Pacific coast and will not be back until Spring. His program is very attractive.

Miss Julia Culp, the eminent Dutch mezzo-soprano, who has created such a profound impression upon the musical public of this country since she first visited it a year ago, will give a recital in Jordan Hall, Friday afternoon, January 9. Miss Culp, like Miss Elene Gerhardt, is an illustration that despite tradition, real artist singers do at times come from Germany. Miss Culp is the possessor of a very beautiful voice which she uses with utmost skill and as an interpreter she has few equals.

There are few artists who come to Boston who have such a large following of admirers as Mischa Elman, who will give a violin recital in Symphony Hall, Saturday afternoon, January 10, at 2.30. Elman combines a skill and musicianship that are strangely at variance with his years. Had Elman been a pianist his playing might have been compared to Mozart. He plays nearly 800 compositions from memory. He plays all the great concertos writen for his instrument, all the concert pieces found in the repertory of other great violinists and an endless number of transcriptions, many of them arranged by himself.

Preacher Plays Tango at Wedding

Could and Would Heed Request of Bridal Couple.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 3.—The Rev. G. L. Morrill of Minneapolis, pastor of the People's Church, had the novel experience of performing the wedding ceremony for a New York couple who were married at a Minneapolis hotel and furnishing the music while the newly wedded pair danced the tango and the Texas Tommy.

The bride and groom were Herman F. Schneider and Eunice M. Mitchell.

After the ceremony Schneider told the minister that he and his wife were professional dancers and were about to leave for Australia, where they would follow their profession. The floor was cleared and a wedding dance, with the preacher at the piano followed.

Beauty, Marred in Wreck, Gets $5,375

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 3.—Miss Clara Jurg[illegible] of Mexico, Mo., was awarded $5,375 damages against the Pennsylvania Railroad Company by jury in Federal Judge Dyer's court. She sued for $35,000.

Miss J[illegible] was a passenger on the Pennsylvania Railroad's [illegible] train from Chicago to New York on February 12, 1912, when the train was derailed and rolled down a [illegible] embankment. In her suit she alleged she suffered an injury to her spine and that her beauty had been marred.

San Francisco City Cars Net $208,000

Wife's Eggnog Advice Leads to Jail

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—Edward Moran told Judge Mullowney in police court that he was caught in the rain and that his wife prescribed eggnog as a drying process. "After I took a good slug of the stuff I decided to go to a picture show," he said. "I staggered and was arrested." Judge Mullowney paroled him.

An attractive program has been arranged for the fourth of the Tremont Temple course concerts Thursday night. The program will include numerous melodies of a patriotic character, including many of the Civil War songs. Large delegations from the G. A. R. and patriotic societies have signified their intention to be present. The singers will be members of the Boston Opera Company and include Miss Evelyn Parnell, the phenomenal coloratura soprano, Elvira Leveroni, the popular contralto, and George Everett, the baritone.

The complete program is:

PORTLAND, Me., Jan. 3.—Mrs. Eliza W. Merrill, the oldest resident of Gray, was 103 years old this week. Mrs. Merrill is fond of motoring and was the oldest person ever to sign the register in the Poland Spring House, this being on her visit there as a guest of Hiram Ricker last Summer. She has written several excellent poems in recent years, two having been set to music, and she has just completed another. Her husband, Enoch Merrill, died in 1910 at the age of ninety-three.

NEWS OF SOCIETY by THE CHAPERONE

IT was a typical New Year Eve gathering assembled at the opera We enjoyed excellent and at the conclusion of the performance all departed for either some down-town hotel or some private home where dinners were being given and where they were to watch the old year out and the new year in

Among those at the opera who later entertained at dinner at the Copley-Plaza were Mr. and Mrs Eben D Jordan, who had with them her son their daughter, Miss Dorothy Jordan, who was wearing a gown of black over the ...dies of jetted lace over white chiffon, and to whom that color is most becoming.

That was the first time I have ever seen Miss Jordan in black as she usually prefers the delicate shades of pink, blue or lavender. In the Jordan box was also Mrs. Robert Jordan, who is so partial to black gowns for evening wear, but who on that night wore a handsome creation of deep old rose satin and beaded chiffon Mrs Jordan was in black velvet and jetted lace

Mrs Henry S Hunnewell was entertained a number of her daughter Mary's friends at dinner and later chaperoned them at the opera, was in black velvet with corsage of jetted lace a large poinsettia giving the only touch of color. Miss Hunnewell, who with her young friends was going to a supper where they could welcome the New Year was most attractive in beaded net with the upper bodice of beaded white chiffon

In the box next to Mrs. Hunnewell was Mrs. Edwin D Brandegee, distinguished in beautifully draped gown of black velvet with bodice of black jetted chiffon over white and a large cluster of old rose flowers on the corsage A white aigrette adorned her well-done coiffure. With Mrs Brandegee was her daughter, Miss Sprague and couple of her girl friends Miss Sprague was seated in front of the box, of white satin made along the simplest lines and her only ornament was a string of pearls

Mrs G Peabody of the somerset entertained several friends in her box and was looking especially well in a gown of white lace over white satin and with large bow of black velvet on the corsage

Mrs Leonard C Dixey also entertained in her box and wore a gown of gray satin with a large pink rose on the corsage Miss her guest was her sister, Miss Mary Tappan, in scarlet and white

* * *

Mrs. Bryce Allyn, who has just returned from Montreal, where she and Mr. Allyn spent Christmas, was in black velvet and jetted lace, and was late hotel among the diners at the Copley Plaza

Mrs. Frank E. Peabody, who entertained several guests in her well-placed box, was in gray satin and white lace

Mrs. Josiah Has... was another entertaining a box party and was also in gray satin and white lace

Mrs. "Jack" Gardner was, as usual, surrounded by an interesting group and was quite radiant in her well-modelled gown of black velvet with upper corsage of black lace over white chiffon

Mrs. James Jackson, Jr., was among the most attractive matrons in the orchestra stalls and for the occasion was wearing a stunning gown of black velvet and white lace

Mrs. Barrett Wendell was among the attractive younger matrons and wore a gown of old rose satin and white lace

Mrs. Curtis Guild was in black satin and white lace and was later hostess for a jolly supper party at the Copley-Plaza. Others who went on to the Copley-Plaza were Mr. and Mrs. Philip Stockton, Mr. and Mrs. Quincy A. Shaw, Mr. and Mrs. William Gray, Mr. and Mrs. William S. Spaulding, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin S. Webster, Mr. and Mrs. C. Frederick Lyman, Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Winslow and Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Danielson

ONE of the very prettiest of the sub-buds seen in town during the holidays was Winsome Frances Bradley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs Robert S Bradley of Commonwealth avenue, who came home from Farmington, where she is attending school, to spend the holidays with her parents.

Miss Bradley, who is an especially pretty young girl, will be numbered among the buds of next season. Shortly after the close of school next June she will go to Europe with her parents to spend the greater part of the Summer and get together her trousseau for the great event next Fall

MRS. T. JAMES BOWLKER, whom I met on Beacon street the other morning with her daughter, Mrs. Stanley Reeve of Pennsylvania, who before her marriage was Katherine Roosevelt, is decidedly one of the smartest looking matrons in Boston society. Mrs Bowlker, who is an ardent devotee of walking and all other out-door exercises, manages to retain the youthful lines of her figure and the buoyancy of spirit due to good health

When I saw Mrs Bowlker the other morning she was wearing a chic suit of black with hat and furs of the same color. Mrs Reeve was in a dark blue suit and a mannish black hat

Mrs. Bowlker has been having a decidedly busy holiday period of it, as she has been entertaining her son and her daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs James A. Roosevelt Jr., and her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Reeve. They have been guests of honor at Mrs. Bowlker's Beacon street home in several of the most interesting entertainments of the holiday season

ONE of the interesting debutante events of the early week was the dance which Mr and Mrs. Harry P. A. Clausen of Regent Circle, Brookline, gave at the Tuileries in honor of their pretty daughter, Miss Frances Clausen

Miss Clausen, who is attending Miss Wright's school at Bryn Mawr, Pa., was home on her vacation during the holidays and this afforded a happy opportunity for her to meet her numerous young friends again.

Mrs. Clausen and her daughter received their guests in the Empire ballroom, where the dancing took place. The dance was preceded by a dinner at the Algonquin Club which Mr and Mrs. Clausen gave for the group of men acting as ushers and enough of Miss Clausen's young girl intimates to make an even number of each.

The ushers were William D Reuter, Nelson Curtis, Jr., Floyd G. Blair, Winthrop P. Mandell, Charles F. Eaton, Wallace A. Tyle, Richard Nichols, Gardner Marion, Robert W. McMillan, Emelyn Mitchell and Hamilton Edwards

I caught a glimpse of Miss Clausen when she was her busiest receiving her guests, and she certainly was a picture of all that is most winsome and girlishly charming. The following day I met her on the street looking not the least like she had danced into the wee small hours of the morning

AMONG the most attractive young matrons in society here is Mrs. Louis Bacon, who, before her marriage, was Miss Southerland of Washington, and who has made a decidedly enviable place for herself in the most exclusive circles here. Mr and Mrs. Bacon have just returned from Washington, where they went to spend Christmas with the latter's parents, Rear Admiral W. H. H. Southerland, U. S. N., and Mrs. Southerland.

I met Mrs. Bacon on the street one day recently when she was looking radiant in a smartly modelled suit of dark blue, trimmed with fur and a chic hat of the same shade of velvet also trimmed with fur. In the evening I saw her at the opera wearing a stunning creation of deepest old rose satin and a few well placed jewels

During the holidays much entertaining has been done for that delightful young matron, Mrs. William M. Bullitt, who before her marriage last Summer was Nora Isaigi, and who, with her husband, spent Christmas with her mother, Mrs. Oscar Isaigi of Beacon street.

Mrs. Bullitt has been wearing a most becoming street costume of dark gray velvet trimmed with squirrel fur and usually a flaming poinsettia on the front of the jacket, which made a decidedly attractive effect

TUESDAY night will be a great and glorious night for all the smartest of the season's debutantes, for then comes the long-anticipated ball which Mr. Herbert Sears is giving at the Copley-Plaza in honor of his pretty and vivacious daughter, Phyllis.

Miss Sears was to have been introduced much earlier in the season, but owing to the death of her grandfather was thrown into mourning, and all the affairs planned in her honor were postponed

Miss Sears is a cousin of Eleonora Sears and her close second when it comes to excellency in riding, driving, swimming, tennis and golf. She is an attractive blonde, and after the sombre colors she has been forced to wear during her early season will blossom forth saxiv in the brighter colors of which she is so fond.

I hear that her gown which she is to wear on the occasion of her debut is a marvel and that the gowns for the subsequent festivities which have been laid carefully aside are the most beautiful worn by any Boston bud in many years. Just the other evening I saw Miss Sears in her father's box at the opera a gown of [illegible] white. With her was Mrs. Bayard Warren, also black

Among the many smart ... to be given before the Sears is the dinner which Mrs. Sheafe is to give at the Copley Plaza in honor of her ... daughter Miss Anne Sheafe, who is a friend of Miss Sears, and with her young intimates, will go on to the ball.

Mr. Sears is also to give a dinner at the Copley-... for Miss Sears and her ... Mrs Charles K Peabody is to entertain a jolly party of young people at a dinner she is to give at the Algonquin Club for her debutante granddaughter, Miss Edith Perkins, all of whom Mrs Perkins will later take on to the Sears ball

THE sub-debutantes are coming in for their share of social at- ... include an unusual number of pretty girls, who, as a whole, ... Miss Weiss which fact alone insures the success of the series.

Miss Reed, who is now a regular member of the Elizabeth Peabody Settlement, has had sixty children under drill for more than two months and promises a treat in costuming, scenic effects, singing and dancing.

The fair ushers who are to show the Back Bay and Brookline patrons to their seats in the little theatre are well known to society, and among them are

Miss Josephine Randall, Miss Anna Agassiz, Miss Anita Sturgis, [illegible], Miss Stella Sturgis, [illegible], Miss Edith [illegible], [illegible], Miss Margaret Bennett, [illegible], Miss Pauline [illegible], [illegible] Mumford, Miss Katherine [illegible], [illegible] Frothingham, Miss Esther Jones, [illegible] Cabot, Miss Josephine Sturgis, [illegible] Lee.

The scenery, which is new and has been especially painted for the production, is the gift of the author, Miss Leonora Lovinan. The play, containing a snow palace, deep woods, a witches' and fairy house and a cottager's hut, lends itself to effective staging, and Miss Reed promises startling surprises in dresses and color; she is negotiating with the Dennison company for costumes for a brilliant human flower garden.

The proceeds from the performance will go toward the work carried on at the Elizabeth Peabody Settlement, which supplies clubrooms, kindergarten, industrial training, gymnasium, baths, domestic science, lectures, games, reading rooms and amusement for several thousand [illegible] attendants who [illegible] the West End.

ONE of the surprises of the new year in the social circles of Boston and New York was the announcement of the engagement of Miss Mary Louise O'Connell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. O'Connell of Brookline, to James Lewis Ryan of New York. Miss O'Connell is a niece of the Cardinal-Archbishop of Boston.

The bride-elect is a member of the Cecilian Guild and has taken a leading part in the social events of Greater Boston.

MRS. EZRA C. FITCH, of 246 Beacon street, who has been having a series of at homes this Winter, discontinuing them for the holidays, is to resume them tomorrow afternoon when as usual she will have a large attendance.

NOTHING smarter in the way of a series of dances is being given this Winter than those in Salem which are held in Hamilton Hall. The first of these is to take place on Tuesday evening when a number of debutantes are planning to attend the affair. The list of patronesses is one closely allied with the smartest set here, as it is headed with Mrs. David Mason Little, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David P. Kimball of Commonwealth avenue, whose daughter, Miss Marguerite Little, made her formal debut at a large dance here at the Hotel Somerset. The other patronesses are Mrs. William G. Rantoul, whose daughter, Miss Eleanor Rantoul, is among the debutantes, Mrs. John Pickering, Mrs. Walter C. Harris, Mrs. Henry P. Benson, Mrs. Frank W. Benson, Mrs. William A. Pew, and Mrs. McDonald E. White. The management is in the hands of Thomas Saunders, Ralph Lawson, Mrs. Walter P. Hall and popular "Jim" Trumbull.

CHATTER of SOCIETY by the Dowager

PROMINENT among the interesting events of the new year was the wedding Thursday evening, of Miss Mabel Chick, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. I. W. Chick of Beacon street, to James O. Foss of Newton, son of Mr. and Mrs. W[illegible] H[illegible]

The ceremony took place at the home of the bride and was performed in the presence of only the immediate families and intimate friends. The Rev. Austen K. DeBlois, D. D., performed the ceremony.

The bride was attended by her roommate at Smith's College Mrs. Harry E. Haws, who was matron of honor.

The attractive group of bridesmaids included Miss Mildred C. Foss, Miss Margaret Foss and Miss Ruth A. French. Miss Mary E. Willard was the flower girl.

W. Morton Bunting of Swampscott was best man and the ushers were William C. Chick, Herbert A. Watson, Harry T. Bradlee and Winthrop C. Richmond.

About 1,500 guests attended the reception, which followed about 8 o'clock, and many of the guests saw the old year out and the new one in.

Mr. Foss and his bride are to make their new home in Bay State road.

THE marriage of Miss Margaret Scheffelein and Frederick Henry Osborn, which is to be solemnized on Saturday noon in New York at the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, is of special social interest as young Ronald Dodge of Cambridge is among the fashionable staff of ushers, while a large number of invitations have been received here for the affair. Mr. and Mrs. William Jay Scheffelein are well known here among the smart set. The other ushers include Bayard Rives, who by marriage is a nephew of "Jim" Lawrence of Groton, and his brother, Prescott Lawrence of New York. Mr. and Mrs. Scheffelein are giving a large dinner for the bridal party tomorrow evening at their town house on East Sixty-sixth street.

I HEAR from the Bostonians who were fortunate enough to be present at the dinner dance which Mrs. Henry F. Dimock gave in Washington on Monday evening that it was by far one of the most brilliant affairs held in the capital for many a day. Mrs. Dimock, who is a sister of Henry M. Whitney of Brookline, is well known here socially where she had spent a great deal of her time. The affair of Monday was given largely in honor of Miss Helen Walcott, a debutante daughter of Professor Charles Walcott, who is secretary of the Smithsonian Institute. Mrs. Dimock was assisted in receiving by her daughter, Mme. Catalini, wife of the Consul of the Italian Embassy. They entertained some three hundred or more guests, composed largely of the diplomatic set, in which they figure so prominently. Contrary to the usual custom, I hear there was no cotillion, but general dancing to the Marine Band, which began at 10 o'clock and continued until well past midnight. The supper was served at small tables and the breakfast came at the wee sma' hours of the dawn. Among the guests to be identified here were Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Hamlin. Mrs. Dimock has as her house guests Mr. and Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, the former first secretary of the American Embassy in Paris.

COLONEL AND MRS. JOHN E. THAYER of this city and Lancaster, Mass., are to give one of the most brilliant affairs of the week in the form of a dance for their third and youngest daughter, Miss Natalie Thayer, at the ballroom of the Hotel Somerset on Friday evening, which will call out the debutante coterie "en masse." I understand that the ushers are to include young John Thayer and I. Tucker Burr, Jr., brother and brother-in-law of the popular young debutante, together with Abbott Goodhue, who married an elder sister, Miss Nora Thayer.

JANUARY 10 is the date for the next Saturday evening sociable held at the Somerset for the young girls who are to be presented next season and their young men friends from Harvard. These affairs are coming to be a decidedly smart series of events and the sub-buds are enjoying their little preliminary affairs more than they likely will enjoy any event of their first season. The patronesses for these affairs include Mrs. Rudolphe L. Agassiz, Mrs. William T. Councilman and Mrs. Frederick S. Converse.

Mrs. Agassiz's second daughter, Miss Anna, and Mrs. Converse's second daughter, Miss Augusta, are two of the most prominent girls, and will take a conspicuous part in the debutante affairs of next Winter.

Mrs. Councilman's daughter, Miss Isabella, belongs to the same group of girls but as she is attending boarding school is unable to attend these dances, which are such decidedly smart affairs.

Other smart young girls whom I have seen at the class include the Misses Muriel Saltonstall, Katherine Sigourney, Margaret Allen, Anna Thorndike, Maud Windeler, Elizabeth Coolidge, Christine Snelling, Gertrude Lovett and Margaret Dutch. Miss Saltonstall is the second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard M. Saltonstall and the sister of Miss Nora Saltonstall, who was presented last year.

Miss Sigourney is the third daughter of Mrs. Henry Sigourney who is introducing Miss Edith this Winter. Miss Allen is the daughter of Mrs. William Lothrop Allen of Chestnut Hill. Her older sister, Miss Charlotte Allen, was introduced several years ago.

Miss Windeler is the daughter of the Herbert Windelers and like Miss Louis Inches, is among the finest yachtswomen of her set.

BIGGEST PIANO CLEARANCE SALE

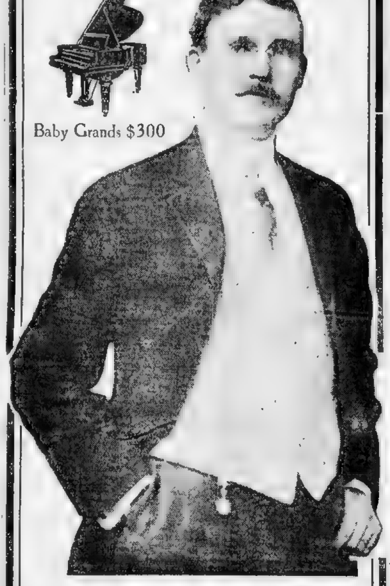
Baby Grands $300



J. P. COLLINS

Founder of the Roxbury Piano Storage Salesrooms Co., the Biggest Distributors of Pianos in America.

People from Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island and Connecticut attend this annual sale—car fares are easily saved by the bargains. Hundreds of the best known makes are now on the sacrifice floor. These annual clearance sales of fine pianos are attended by a great many piano dealers and manufacturers who attempt to underbuy the individual. Mr. Collins has made it a rule, a hard and fast business rule, not to sell a dealer or manufacturer any piano, their own make or any other make, for one cent less than the price to the individual.

Remember, this is not an auction sale. There is no one to bid against you. The pianos are all marked down to the lowest price with no regard to make or profit. Most of the pianos in the storage salesrooms are brand new; a few of the finest known makes have been slightly used. The Sacrifice Tag is put on each piano, with the price plainly marked. An early attendance means an excellent choice.

News of Society

PRETTY Anne Sheafe is coming in for the lion's share of attention this Winter it would seem and never a day has passed since her debut that she has not had some affair given in her honor or else been busy with the affairs given for her sister buds.

Besides the [illegible] Miss Sheafe's mother, Mrs. [illegible] Sheafe, is giving in her honor Wednesday night before the [illegible] ball at the Copley-Plaza she is later in the week to be guest of honor at a debutante dinner which Mrs. William H. Aspinwall is giving in her honor as well as that of Miss Edith McHenry of Baltimore, the daughter of William Cary McHenry, and one of the leading debutantes of the Winter in Baltimore. Miss McHenry will be the house guest of Mrs. Aspinwall as well as several of her other Boston friends.

Among the very gayest of house parties over the New Year was that given by Mr. and Mrs. A. Henry Higginson at their fine country place at Lincoln when they entertained lavishly as is their custom. I saw Mrs. Higginson in town one day recently when she was looking especially well in a suit of dark gray cloth trimmed with fur and a small hat also fur-trimmed.

ONE of the many interesting events of New Year's eve was the musicale given by Mr. and Mrs. William B. H. Dowse at their beautiful estate "Eswood House," West Newton, as a farewell to the old year and a welcome to the new. A decidedly interesting program was presented by Mrs. Grace Bonner Williams, soprano; Carl Webster, 'cello; Arthur Brook, flute and Mrs. Jessie Downer Easton, accompanist. The house was attractively decorated for the occasion and refreshments and dancing came later.

Mr. and Mrs. Dowse have been entertaining a great deal this Winter in honor of their third daughter, Miss Beatrice Dowse, who was presented earlier in the [illegible]

Prominent among the matrons of the exclusive little colony of younger married people of Charles River square is the charming Mrs. Harris Livermore, who before her marriage was the popular Mildred Stimson.

Mrs. Livermore, whom I saw recently at the opera, still clings to her Oriental mode of dressing, which is so vastly becoming to her style of beauty. The long dark earrings and the heavy Oriental head dress as well as her beautifully draped gown made her a vastly interesting figure and one whom all eyes followed admiringly as she promenaded through the foyer.

Mrs. Stimson has been giving some delightful entertainments during the holidays at her artist home, of which the handsome studio is the centre of interest. At many of her entertainments, which have for the most part taken the form of dancing, many officers from Argentine, who have been sent over to inspect the battleship at the Fore River yard, added much to the interest of the affairs.

I SAW pretty Jane Fairfield the day she left town with her mother, Mrs. James C. Barr, and the day before her engagement to Landon Humphreys of Morristown, N. J., and New York City was announced. Miss Fairfield, who is only eighteen and looks even younger, was most attractive in a suit of dark blue broadcloth trimmed with wide bands of black fur about the bottom of the coat and the sleeves. With this she wore a fur-trimmed hat and a large black muff. Miss Fairfield, who for a few days was at the Ritz-Carlton with her mother, left on Friday for Washington, D. C., to visit her grandmother, Mrs. George Fairfield, widow of the late scientist, and to visit her friend, Miss Brooks, at the home of her grandfather, General John M. Wilson on Massachusetts avenue.

Miss Fairfield will return to New York tomorrow to join her mother, Mrs. Barr, at the Ritz-Carlton, and on Wednesday will sail for Europe on La France.

ONE of the most interesting events of the week to come will be the presentation of "The Snow Queen," a play for children, written by Leonora Loveman and staged and managed entirely by that interesting young woman, Miss Charlotte Louise Read, who last September surprised all her friends by giving up all the gayeties to which her social position entitled her and became a volunteer resident worker of the Peabody Settlement.

The play will be given next Saturday afternoon at 2 p. m. at the Elizabeth Peabody Home.

Among the prominent society girls, members of the Junior League, who will act as ushers are the Misses Josephine Rantoul, Katherine and Pauline Pollard, Anita and Susette Sturgis, Margaret and Helen Bennett, Harriet Fessenden, Josephine Sturgis, Anne Williams, Margaret Allen, Ellen Rollins, Isabella Mumford, Edith Stanwood, Muriel Wilson, Florence Lee and Caroline Cabot. [illegible] an especially attractive group of girls and all are [illegible] in the work of the settlement and are constantly contributing to its success.

The scenery for the play was presented by Leonora Loveman and the costumes were designed and made by Miss Read.

AMONG the interesting guests in Boston just at present is Mrs. George Howland, who was formerly Miss Stackpole, but who has been residing in Paris much of the time recently. Mrs. Howland is the guest of her mother, Mrs. J. Lewis Stackpole, at her home in Beacon street, and has been having a happy time of it renewing acquaintances with her many girlhood friends, who are all so anxious to do something in her honor. I saw Mrs. Howland on the street recently with her sister, Miss Alice Stockpole, and a stunning pair they make. They are both tall and stately and on that occasion were both in black.

They were making their way along at a rapid pace and were evidently out for their daily constitutional.

Miss Elizabeth Bennett has just returned to town from a short visit in the White Mountains and after her brief retirement from the social gayeties of the season on account of the death of her aunt, Mrs. Louis Stoddard of New York, will resume her place once more with the girls who are to wind the season up in a blaze of glory. They have only till February 25, which is the beginning of Lent, and propose to make the very most of the brief time left them.

BROOKLINE

MRS. WILLIAM H. HILL of Marion street, Brookline, is planning to sail on the Franconia, to pass the Winter in Egypt. She will spend several months abroad and visit various parts of Europe.

The engagement of Miss Ruth Standish Baldwin, 2nd, of Washington, Conn., to John Fulton Follansbee, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harrison D. Follansbee of Brookline, has been announced. Miss Baldwin is the daughter of the late William H. Baldwin, who was president of the Long Island Railroad.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Fred Kenny of Warwick road, accompanied by their son, Master Frederick Kenny, have been spending a few days at Atlantic City, with a party of friends who joined them there from New York.

Several hundred members of society were present at a dance given in honor of Miss Frances Clausen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry P. A. Clausen, of No. 11 Regent Circle, at the Hotel Tuileries last Monday evening. Miss Clausen is home for the holidays from Miss Wright's school at Bryn Mawr, Pa., where she is completing her education. The dance was preceded by a dinner at the Algonquin Club, which was given by her parents for the young men who served as ushers and young women intimates of Miss Clausen. The ushers were Nelson Curtis, Jr., Floyd G. Blair, William D. Rueter, Winthrop P. Mandell, Charles F. Eaton, Wallace A. Tyle, Richard Nichols, Gardner Marion, Robert W. McMilliam, Emlyn Mitchell and Hamilton Edwards.

The dance of the Gamma Delta Psi Fraternity, which was given at Gardner Hall last Tuesday evening, was the second in the series and was largely attended. The patronesses were Mrs. George P. Faxon, Mrs. Charles H. Eglee, Mrs. Edward Stewart, Mrs. Sullivan A. Sargent, Mrs. Harry B. Trainer and Mrs. Charles R. Talbot.

Mr. and Mrs. William T. McQuillen are spending the Winter months at Clark road, but they make frequent visits to "Wild Acres," their Summer place at East Bridgewater.

The John M. Longyears are spending the holidays with Mr. Longyear's mother at Lansing, Michigan.

The engagement is announced of Miss Mary E. Barrett of Dorchester to G. Garterell Jones of Cypress street.

Carroll C. O'Neil of Harvard street and Alexander C. Nixon of Summit avenue are spending their Christmas vacation in the western part of the State of New Hampshire touring with the Tufts College Glee and Mandolin Club. Mr. O'Neil, who is a senior at Tufts, is one of this year's soloists. Mr. Nixon of the Sophomore class is a player of the mandolin.

The engagement is announced of Miss Elizabeth Bowker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur W. Bowker of 23 Toxteth street, to Chester Chamberlin Butts, Dartmouth '11, of Newton Centre.

Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Harrington, who have been on a long trip in California and other western States, have returned to their home on Beacon street for the Winter.

Miss Gertrude Cramer

Social leader of Boston's younger smart set, who was heroine of an automobile dash across the African desert to escape a horde of Arabs. Below is a portrait of Mrs. Joseph Linden Smith, another brigade leader of Boston's smart set.

Miss Gertrude Cramer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel W. Bates of No. 290 Commonwealth avenue, is one of the younger smart set who figures as a leader in the season's social activities.

She is remembered as the heroine of an automobile dash across the African desert with her father and mother. The party was pursued by a horde of Arabs, and had it not been for Miss Cramer's skill in the use of the Arab tongue and her wit in dealing with the wild nomads, it is probable that serious results would have followed.

Miss Cramer is a well-known amateur in society theatricals and belongs to the out-of-door set. She skates and snow-shoes during the Winter and [illegible] which is foremost in smart sports of the Summer set.

If Boston's smart set were divided into brigades, Mrs. Joseph Linden Smith (Corinna H. Putnam) would easily be a leading member of the finance and business committee.

Mrs. Smith, while belonging to all the musical clubs and exclusive organization of Beacon Hill, is interested in the Charles River Co-operative Store to the extent that she visits the farmers of New Hampshire to see that the store gets strictly fresh eggs, butter, cheese, vegetables, etc. She is also an active worker in every movement that aims to make Beacon Hill and its vicinity a neighborhood of friends and kindred spirits.

Like her distinguished artist husband Mrs. Smith is so much a worker for all the entertainments and social fripolities arranged for society that one is apt to lose sight of the fact that she herself is foremost in the ranks of the real "4[illegible]" of the Back Bay.

Proceeds Go to Charity

Bishop Cheverus Assembly, Fourth Degree, Knights of Columbus, has voted that the proceeds of the grand ball to be held in Symphony Hall two nights before Lent begins, will be devoted to charity. As soon as possible after the event the executive committee will send a check for the entire net amount to Cardinal O'Connell for the Diocesan Charitable Bureau, which, under the executive direction of the Rev. Michael J. Scanlon, cares for the finances of the hospitals, homes, orphanages and other institutions of the archdiocese.

This vote of the assembly has met with hearty approval, not only in the ranks of the membership of the order, but by the prominent Catholic families of Greater Boston, who will tender their support in making the ball a complete success.

The committees to manage the reception and ball have already been named, and they have begun their task of working out the numerous details of organization.

The subscription list will be limited so as to enable the party to be one of comfort for all. Not more than 1,000 tickets will be sold.

Unnecessary Fat

Mankind was intended to be shapely—not too fat, not too lean, but just the happy medium between the two—symmetry. Any addition to this is unnecessary. There is no reason why the people with double chins, too ample bosoms, too generous waist lines and hip measurements, cannot decrease their weight and become slim without the necessity of dieting, violent exercise, or the danger of becoming wrinkled or flabby. The famous Marmola Prescription (known the world over) has been used successfully by so many stout people that it is hardly possible you have not heard of it. It will be good news to you that this harmless obesity remedy is now sold in tablet form. Each one of the Marmola Prescription Tablets contains an exact dose of the same safe, effective ingredients as the original prescription and, like it, reduces at the uniform rate of a pound or more a day. The cost of slimness is moderate. A 75c case lasts a long time and gives lasting benefit to any overfat man or woman. Get it from your druggist or the Marmola Co., Farmer Bldg., Detroit, Mich. Here is an opportunity to lose your unnecessary fat safely at a nominal expense.

Rheumatis[m]

Remarkable Home Cure Given by One Who Had It—HE Wants Every Sufferer to Benefit.

Send No Money—Just Your Address

Years of awful suffering and misery have taught this man, Mark H. Jackson, of Syracuse, New York, how terrible an enemy to human happiness rheumatism is, and have given him sympathy with all unfortunates who are within its grasp. He wants every rheumatic victim to know how he was cured. Read what he says:

"I Had Sharp Pains Like Lightning Flashes Shooting Through My Joints."

"In the spring of 1893 I was attacked by Muscular and Inflammatory Rheumatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy, and doctor after doctor, but such relief as I received was only temporary. Finally, I found a remedy that cured me completely, and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted and even bedridden with Rheumatism, and it effected a cure in every case.

"I want every sufferer from any form of rheumatic trouble to try this marvelous healing power. Don't send a cent; simply mail your name and address and I will send it free to try. After you have used it and it has proven itself to be that long-looked-for means of curing your Rheumatism, you may send the price of it, one dollar, but, understand, I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it. Isn't that fair? Why suffer any longer when positive relief is thus offered you free? Don't delay. Write today. MARK H. JACKSON, No. 630 Gurney Bldg., Syracuse, N. Y.

MARLBOROUGHS' REUNION FIXED FOR THIS MONTH

Special Cable to Boston American.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—Friends of the Duchess of Marlborough say the Duke will join the Duchess somewhere on the Continent early this month, and that the long separated pair will come to London to live, at any rate, under the same roof. That this badly assorted couple will ever live really happily together is doubted by the friends on both sides, but it is believed that the strenuous efforts made at Court, and especially by Queen Mary, will be rewarded.

The Queen has gone out of her way for several months to pay marked attention to the Duchess. Her Majesty has pointed out that the position of the boys, young Lord Blandford and Lord Ivor Spencer Churchill, will become more and more painful as they grow older.

But a far more powerful incentive has proved to be the anxiety of the Duke to shine in politics. His great ambition is to be included in the next Conservative Cabinet, and it is almost essential that his private life should be exempt from all gossip.

The Duke will never be popular with the crowd, owing to his cold personality and his unfortunate sneering expression, but in recent years he has taken a serious interest in politics, and more particularly the land question, on which he can speak and write brilliantly. His sons are more devoted to their mother than to their father, but it is very awkward for them to have to visit their parents in turn.

The Duke is anxious that his eldest son should become a statesman, and he writes almost daily to the boy on all subjects. The Duke, by the way, is a great friend of F. E. Smith, M. P., and the two have arranged to play a lawn tennis match for $5,000 a side at Miss Maxine Elliott's country house, where she has a Winter court.

AMERICANS SEE SACRED RITE OF THE HOLY CARPET

Special Cable to Boston American.

CAIRO, Jan. 3.—One of the most interesting and world-renowned ceremonies of the Eastern world took place here last Saturday, attended by the Khedive and his staff, two battalions of Egyptian infantry, immense crowds of natives and a large contingent of American and European visitors.

The ceremony was the return of the Mahmal, or holy carpet, from Mecca. The sacred caravan arrived after a long procession from Abbasseyeh in the Mohammed Aly Square at the foot of the Citadel, amid the acclamations of the crowd and to the salute of a battery of twenty-one guns, precisely at 10 o'clock.

Here his highness the Khedive was in waiting in his motor car, having come over from Abdin Palace, his Cairo residence, ascorted by his ministers and governor of Cairo. The Khedive at once placed himself at the head of the procession by taking the halter of the Mahmal from the hands of the "Emir El Hag" and passing it on to the Usenas, the Effendis and the other grandees present.

The picturesque pageant was concluded by the Usenas reverently kissing the halter, a duty performed in rotation by the different suites in their turn. The ceremony over, the carpet was carried down to the Ministry of Finance, where it is cut up into small pieces and distributed among the faithful.

It is needless to say that the carpet is a superb work of art, since as the Oriental alone can fabricate. It is composed of the richest material obtainable in Cairo and worked out by the most nimble-fingered and experienced men in the profession. For centuries it has been sent annually to Mecca to take the place of the carpet sent there the year before, which is brought back to Cairo. It is said to be the finest carpet in the world after that of Damascus.

The return of the holy carpet synchronizes with the arrival of the first batch of pilgrims returning from their holy duties. An animated and interesting scene is presented on the arrival of the various parties at the great central station at Cairo. Crowds of friends and relatives assemble at the station to embrace with all the wealth of Eastern ceremonial these new Sheiks of Islam.

As soon as they have shaken off the trammels of their journey they and, mounting a carriage, parade the and, mounting a carriage, parade the principal thoroughfares of the city, to be seen and to be admired.

MALLABY-DEELY'S SOURCE OF WEALTH PUZZLES LONDONERS

M. P. Who Made $15,000,000 Realty Deal with Duke of Bedford a Financial Mystery

Special Cable to Boston American.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—Mystery seems to envelop the personality of Mr. Mallaby-Deely, M. P., the purchaser of the world-famed London property of the Duke of Bedford in and around Covent Garden.

No one appears to know anything about his wealth, its source or whether in the present instance he is acting for himself or in conjunction with others.

It is only in a country like England where so little curiosity is displayed even about men who apparently command millions that such a state of affairs is possible. Although the papers are flooded with articles on everything Mr. Mallaby-Deely is known to have done, not one of them contains anything of a positive nature concerning what everyone is dying to know, namely, whence comes his apparent command of literally fabulous wealth.

SECRET IN THE FAMILY.

A man who can make the biggest deal as between two individuals on record is certainly worth some trouble to place in the financial world. But Mr. Mallaby-Deely is not a man who gives his story away to the first bidder, and it is not particularly likely that his brother, Frank Curzon, the popular theatrical manager, will be the man from whom to learn the story. Altogether he has laid out but the estimated sum of something like $15,000,000, and yet, until this last deal was announced, his name was almost unknown.

Another strange phase of the affair is Mr. Mallaby-Deely's object in buying so costly an estate when, according to his own statement, he has no ulterior object in so doing. He does not want to pull down anything that exists. The property was purchased merely as an investment.

Why the Duke of Bedford should have parted with so rich and certain a rental is another hard nut to crack. The four theatres on the estate, Covent Garden, Drury Lane, Strand and Aldwych, alone brought him in $120,000 a year, to say nothing of considerable ground rents, the numerous saloons and shops with which the district is well supplied. The Britisher is very easily put off and unless these questions are probed from some American source it is more than probable the world will never learn the true inwardness of this colossal deal.

TWO HISTORIC THEATRES.

An immense amount of public interest centres around the sale of the Bedford estate in central London, seeing that the two most historic theatres the nation possesses are included in the sale. These are Covent Garden and Drury Lane, respectively rated at $24,000 and $28,753.

Drury Lane, the older theatre of the two, was built in 1662 under a patent granted by Charles II., the present building dating from 1813. The present lease was first obtained from the Duke of Bedford by that great impresario, Sir Augustus Harris.

The names of world-famed actors have in the long history of this mammoth theatre been among the many lessees. These include: Sir Richard Steele, Colly Cibber, David Garrick, Richard Brinsley Sheridan, John P. Kemble, W. C. Macready, Edmund Falconer, F. B. Chatterton and the late Sir Augustus Harris. Arthur Collins is the present managing director of the theatre.

It was not until 1731 that the first Covent Garden Theatre was built by John Rich. This ground and that occupied by the Market had formerly been covered by a monastery with large gardens attached. This accounts for the name so long borne by this district which was probably known as "couvent," the French for convent, in its early days, and was later changed to "Covent."

Handel, the great composer, was one of the first who produced opera in the new house, and though his name has been handed down to fame he managed to go bankrupt after a second season in 1743. Some fifteen years later, Goldsmith's "Good-Natured Man" was first produced, and in 1773 "She Stoops to Conquer" first saw the light.

An epoch was reached when the incomparable Mrs. Siddons made her first bow to the public in 1786, and though the great theatre has been burned down on two or three occasions, it remains the first National Opera House in the British dominions.

IF KIDNEYS FEEL LIKE LEAD OR YOUR BACK HURTS, TAKE SALTS

We eat too much meat, which clogs Kidneys, and they need a flushing occasionally.

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid, which clogs the kidney pores so they sluggishly filter or strain only part of the waste and poisons from the blood, then you get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, constipation, dizziness, sleeplessness, kidney disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any reliable pharmacy and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, which all regular meat eaters should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

MANY AMERICANS HAVE STAMP FAD

King George Reads in New Philatelic Work of Noteworthy Collection in New Jersey.

Special Cable to Boston American.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—King George, one of the most ardent collectors of stamps in this country, has purchased Douglas Armstrong's book on "Stamp Collecting," which he has read with the greatest interest.

It appears that an Austrian nobleman, Herr von Ferrary, residing in Paris, has the most valuable collections. A few years ago Mr. Ferrary's collections were valued at $5,000,000. The finest collection in America is that of George Worthington of Cleveland, O. It is ranked second among the world's collections. A few years ago Mr. Worthington made known his intention to bequeath his philatelic treasures to the city of Cleveland.

The leading English collection today is undoubtedly that formed by H. J. Duveen, well known art expert, which, although begun as recently as 1893, is probably of equal intrinsic value to the Worthington collection. It occupies close upon one hundred large volumes.

The collections formed by the late Earl of Crawford and Balcarres are without doubt the most important and valuable in Great Britain. Probably the leading collection of the stamps of Great Britain, after that of the late Earl of Crawford, is the property of Sydney Locke, and is valued at something like $90,000.

America also boasts some notable collections of a specialistic nature, of which those of Charles Lathrop Pack of Lakewood, N. J., the well-known forestry expert, afford a prominent example. Other prominent American collections are those of W. H. Crocker of San Francisco, F. C. Foster of Boston and H. E. Deats of Flemington, N. J.

"Movies" to Build Up British Army

Recruits Are Scarce and Films Will Be Used to Snare 'Em.

Special Cable to Boston American.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—The shortage not only of officers but of men in the regular army is causing serious anxiety at the War Office. This frequently occurs in times of trade prosperity, but the falling off in recruiting has never been so marked.

A tremendous campaign is about to be started by the aid of moving pictures. Every town of any size in the provinces will be visited and the joys of the army will be depicted on a wonderful film which has taken months of work at all different army centres to produce.

The old recruiting sergeants who may be seen any day in Trafalgar square are horrified at what they call "these Yankee methods," but they would probably be still more pained if they knew that the War Office has also engaged a "publicity agent" quite apart from the film campaign.

King George Angry at Theatre Managers

Suffragists' Opera Demonstration Result of Unwritten Law Violation.

Special Cable to Boston American.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—Although King George and Queen Mary preserved outward indifference during the recent carefully organized and high-expensive suffragist demonstration at Covent Garden Opera House they are deeply annoyed at such an event having taken place.

It has always been an unwritten law at court that whenever either the King or Queen proposed to pay any but a state visit to either the theatre or the opera the fact should not be previously announced, since their majesties are always anxious to avoid anything in the nature of a demonstration, even of loyalty.

His Majesty has now made it clear to those about him that if any similar announcement of his intention to visit a London theatre be made without his express authority the engagement will be cancelled at once. The hint is to be conveyed to the proper quarters through the Lord Chamberlain's department, and every manager will receive an intimation to this effect.

More 'Color' Wanted for England's Cities

Special Cable to Boston American.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—R. Goulburn Lovell, a member of the Royal Institute of British Architects, in an address before the Society of Architects, has been saying many very interesting things on the subject of "Color" in dark places and pleads for a more generous use of bright colors as a relief to the monotonous greyness of England's grim cities.

He says nature has done more to make London beautiful than to the majority of the most famous cities. For instance, "If anyone will look down Oxford street at any time in the afternoon he will see the most beautiful panorama of color effects. What we lack is form; those villainous chimney pots, those long barrack-like buildings." Lovell says he describes as a brown city, Paris as a blue one.

Grosvenor Square Is Hub of the Peerage

Has More Dukes and Lesser Titles Than Any Other London Section.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—Now that the young Duke of Sutherland, whose father set aside $300,000 for a town house in place of Stafford House, has taken a mansion in Grosvenor square, that square will have more ducal residents than any other street or square in London.

The Dukes of Portland, Somerset and Manchester are already there to say nothing of the lesser fry of the peerage as represented by a marquis, two earls and seven barons.

The remaining houses—there are about fifty all told—are occupied by bowagers, wealthy M. P.'s, baronets, untitled Croesuses, American women with millions and social ambitions, and by a quartet of diplomats—their excellencies the Ambassadors of the United States, Japan and Italy, and the Chilian Minister.

According to present arrangements Prince and Princess Arthur are to be present at the first court held by the King and Queen at Buckingham Palace, which will probably be fixed for Friday, February 13.

Strange Fish Again Blocks the Thames

LONDON, Jan. 3.—An extraordinary fish has come up the Thames estuary in such numbers that it has cleared the river of everything else. The fish has been dubbed "Fenians" and has not been seen in such numbers for forty years.

An expert [illegible] examined the "Fenians" very cl[illegible] and found that they are nothing [illegible] or less than a small whiting.

CZAR WILL VIEW CRUCIFIXION PLAY

Special Wireless to the American.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 3.—The Czar and Czarina will shortly witness a production of a play at their private theatre at Tsarkoe Selo, which if produced publicly, will shock all Russia.

It is a dramatized version of Marie Corelli's "Barabbas," written by the Grand Duke Constantine. Not even the Czar will allow the figure of Christ to be presented upon the stage, so the play will be acted by people who are supposed to view the scene of the crucifixion over a wall on the stage hiding from the spectators the real drama.

Originally the Grand Duke wished to produce his play publicly, but the Holy Synod objected. The Czar, however, determined to see it, and arranged a production at his palace in the presence only of the imperial family and its intimate friends. The Grand Duke will act the principal part, and the other roles will be played by nobles of the highest rank and members of elite St. Petersburg society.

Special Cable to Boston American.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—The whaling season of the year just ended has been one of the most successful on record. It is estimated that the yield of oil amounted to about 800,000 casks.

Norwegian enterprise was chiefly responsible, particularly in the Southern Hemisphere, a large number of old British vessels being employed in connection with the operations.

There is now, however, a fear that the industry is being overdone, and it is probable that steps will soon be taken for the purpose of putting a stop to the indiscriminate slaughter that has been going on during the last few years.

Crippled Czarevitch Has a Bad Relapse

Special Wireless to the American.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 3.—The little Czarevitch has suffered a serious relapse. His never will be able to get accustomed to the iron leg support which he has worn for the past year.

Warbling Laird Out with a Tent Show

Special Cable to Boston American.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—Maclaine, of Lochbuie, the Scottish Laird, who not long since sang comic songs in New York at a princely salary, has just concluded a tour in his native Highlands with a music hall company, which in England is called a "pup show," playing in tents, at village halls and all sorts of holes and corners.

The venture was a financial failure, but appears to have afforded the young Laird much amusement. He was accompanied and stage managed by his sister, Mrs. Morris, wife of a Manchester doctor, who now entertains her friends when she lunches or dines out by giving imitations of the music hall artists with whom she had to mix.

Maclaine is a godson of the Duke of Argyll, and a boom friend of Prince Alexander, of Battenberg. He looks forward to returning to America shortly and replenishing the family coffers. He does not consider he did himself justice on his first appearance in New York, as he was so nervous.

Cow Rescue Makes All England Laugh

LONDON, Jan. 3.—The rescue of a cow is making England laugh. A farmer who refused to pay arrears under the insurance act had one of cows seized by the sheriff. The beast was led into the square of the market town of Turrit, Aberdeenshire, to be sold, but was rushed out of the place by a crowd of 5,000 farmers. No local auctioneer would conduct the sale and one was brought from the neighboring county of Banf. He fled when bombarded with cabbages, rotten eggs and other missiles. Meanwhile the cow had run out of town, the rope attached to its bridle having been cut.

Primitive Man Did Not Fare So Badly

EDINBURGH, Jan. 3.—Primitive man in the British Isles did not fare so badly, if conclusions drawn by two Scotch archaeologists, A. Henderson Bishop and Ludovic Mann, who have been exploring ancient mounds on islet of Oronsay, be true.

An immense amount of material in the mounds was sifted and scrutinized in the most minute fashion, and great quantities of objects were secured for further examination in the laboratory. The material consisted of worked-out implements and weapons of shell, horn, bone and stone.

Expose 'Bureau' for German Duellists

BERLIN, Jan. 3.—Duelling has been despoiled of most of its romance by the discovery of a "duel bureau" which furnishes combatants for the field of honor to all persons who can afford the price, said to be low.

Herr Erzberger, the Roman Catholic leader, exposed the duel bureau while making an appeal before the Reichstag to have the war minister prohibit duelling in the army. After stating that but one word from the Kaiser would end the duel, Herr Erzberger continues:

"Here in Berlin there is an institution in which professional gentlemen are employed to bring about divorce suits, and so compel the injured husband to challenge them.

The institution enjoys a large patronage, among those from whom they employ the "man of honor" when it happens to be inconvenient for them to fight in person.

BLACK AND WHITE RULE IN THE REALM OF FASHION

Striking Combination Is Seen in New Gowns Just Created for Lady Brooke

Special Cable to Boston American.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—Black and white still hold the field for evening gowns. There are few women who don't look their best in this combination, and the result is that all the smartest dressmakers in London now vie with each other in creating original designs in black and white.

A charming evening collette has just been made for Lady Brook. It is fashioned of black Nevada charmeuse, draped in soft glinting folds on the right side of the skirt, while at the back the material is wrapped over on the left, where it is cut in a one-sided fashion to form a train.

The bodice of filmy white tulle illusion veils a deep corsalet of shell pink satin and is thickly encrusted with paste and passe embroidery, picked out with great blister pearls, while a narrow corselet is simulated by means of gold thread embroidery veining the pattern of gems.

Two great glittering bands in form of triangles of paste are hung with a thick fringe of pearls from the waist over the hips, while a butterfly bow of white tulle, caught down with a brilliant paste buckle, is perched on the bust. Folds of white tulle form the bell sleeves, which are bordered with double flounces of plisse tulle illusion.

How to Make Better Cough Syrup Than You Can Buy

A Family Supply, Saving $2, and Fully Guaranteed.

A full pint of cough syrup—as much as you could buy for $2.50—can easily be made at home. You will find nothing that takes hold of the ordinary cough more quickly, usually conquering it inside of 24 hours. Excellent, too, for spasmodic croup, whooping cough, bronchial colds and bronchitis.

Mix one pint of granulated sugar with ½ pint of warm water, and stir for 2 minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a pint bottle, then add Sugar Syrup. It keeps perfectly. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

This is just laxative enough to help relieve a cough. Also stimulates the appetite, which is usually poor when a cough is present. The taste is pleasant.

Good effect of pine and sugar syrup on the inflamed membranes is well known. Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, rich in guaiacol and other natural healing pine elements. Other preparations will not work in this combination.

This Pinex and Sugar Syrup remedy has often been imitated, but the old successful mixture has never been equaled. It is now used in more homes than any other cough remedy.

A guaranty of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. Your druggist has Pinex, or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

SMITH, M. P., OF LIVERPOOL FLINGS TAUNT AT IRISH PEOPLE; BELFAST ANSWERS

By C. O'CONNELL GALVIN.

DEFEATED in debate before the people and beaten to the dust in every argumentative contest since the great progress of home rule first threw them into panic, the Tory-Orange leaders have changed their weapons to jeers and sneers at the vast home rule majority in Ireland and its leaders.

The first to start this noble line of campaign is Mr. F. E. Smith, one of the Tory members for the very Tory city of Liverpool. Mr. F. E. Smith of Liverpool is a young man, just turned forty-one. He was elected to Parliament about seven years ago, but despite his brevity of service he has already begun to incubate very high ambitions. He would like to be Prime Minister of the next Tory Cabinet, just as Sir Edward Carson would like to be the next Tory Lord Chancellor of Ireland, which is sure to happen as soon as he defeats home rule with his army of wooden guns and unfireable rifles.

Mr. F. E. Smith, M. P., cannot be the next Tory Premier until he first elbows out of his way Arthur Balfour, Bonar Law and Austen Chamberlain. But this little contract would not disturb a nerve in Mr. Smith's makeup. I listened to him for half an hour one night in the House of Commons talking as solemn as an oracle and as wise as an owl against home rule, and I made up my mind as I heard his oracular sentences that the young man had political self-conceit enough to move a mountain.

BELFAST ANSWERS SNEER.

Seeing the utter failure of the Carson civil war program he proceeded the other day to propound a new policy. He gave forth to the world a speech, the keynote of which was "Ireland does not want home rule; she will neither fight for it nor pay for it." Having sounded this battle note he sat down to watch and await events.

Quick echo came to his sneer. But it was not the answer he looked for. And of all places in Ireland he got it from the sturdy Nationalists—Protestant and Catholic—of the city of Belfast. There was no mere, frothy rhetoric in the retort. Money for the home rule war chest was the answer to the tune of $5500.

With the money went a letter to Mr. Joseph Devlin, M. P., the idolized young leader of all red-blooded Ulstermen, in which the following sentiments were panned:

"The Nationalists and Liberals of Ulster comprise the bulk of the reasonable and law-abiding section of the community. They pursue their rights in a fair-minded and perfectly constitutional manner. Conscious of the justice of their mutual cause, possessing the courage of their opinions, they are fully convinced that an elective parliamentary assembly in their country, controlling and guiding their internal and domestic affairs, will result in the creation of a national brotherhood on the basis of toleration, and equality and liberty.

ANXIOUS FOR PEACE AND CONCORD.

"Might we add that, resident as we are in Belfast, we entertain nothing but the most friendly feelings towards those who comprise the rank and file of the Orange and Unionist forces in our midst; we are anxious to live and work in peace and amity with them. It is a sad reflection to think that in Belfast alone, of all the cities in the civilised world, can there be found bigotry and intolerance so unblushingly rampant.

"If we, as the minority in Belfast, have reason to complain of the harsh and unfair treatment meted out to us in the past, so conspicuously distinguished from the tolerant and generous treatment extended to the minority in Catholic Dublin and elsewhere throughout Ireland, nevertheless, we desire to see closed for ever this unhappy chapter of Irish history. We cannot forget that there were, a hundred years ago, in this city, brave and enlightened Protestant patriots who battled for Catholic emancipation without any modification; that there were prominent Orangemen and scores of Orange lodges that objected to the passing of the disastrous Act of Union; and we feel that, narrow as the view now taken by some of our Protestant fellow-citizens, they will yet clearly comprehend the basic principle of nationality which takes in every individual of the Irish nation, casts an equal eye over the whole Ireland, embraces all that think, and feels for all that suffer."

THANKS HIS NATIVE CITY.

Acknowledging the Belfast subscriptions to the national battle fund, Mr. Devlin answered:

"Every patriotic Irishman ought to ponder on the lesson which your example affords. Especially commendable is it when regard is had to the tendency which unfortunately manifests itself in certain parts of the country to imperil the solidarity of our movement in a spirit of selfishness and reckless disregard of national duty at this momentous period in our country's fortunes.

"Quite recently, Mr. F. E. Smith, in the course of a recital of his gallant experiences through Ulster, made the impudent declaration that the people of Ireland were neither prepared to pay for home rule nor fight for it. These characteristic misrepresentations can best be answered by pointing to the fact that the response that has been made to the appeal of the national trustees for the home rule fund during the past few years has eclipsed five times over the record of previous years of the national struggle.

"Never, in the heyday of the movement for legislative freedom under Mr. Parnell's leadership, have the people rallied so unitedly or subscribed more liberally in support of their principles. Your present list of subscribers and the total amount forwarded are ten times larger than that of five years ago. Does that betray any wavering in your earnestness, or any weakening in your national faith? Just as you have exhibited a spirit of union and perseverance in the past, and demonstrated your practical ability to support your principles by financially backing them up, so, too, you have nobly shown how men can silently suffer and make great sacrifices for the nation they love, and for whose emancipation they are proud to toil.

READY BOTH TO FIGHT AND PAY.

"The necessity will never arise; but if it should, Mr. Smith may rest assured that the Nationalists of Belfast, if assailed, may be counted on to fight as well as pay for the principles they hold dear.

No praise can suffice for your forbearance, your patient tolerance, and your charity, in face of cruel and unparalleled aggression and persecution. But you have learned your lesson of nationality in the school of adversity and trial, and you recognise there is no sacrifice too great in order to attain the priceless boon of free institutions, as there is no advantage sufficiently compensating for their loss.

"I heartily agree with the sentiments to which you give expression regarding the kindly feelings entertained by you towards the rank and file of your Protestant fellow-citizens. Their interest and yours, could they only recognise it, are identical. We know their minds have been poisoned by the calumnies invented against the Catholics of Ireland by the faction of landlords, place hunters, and sweaters anxious to continue their selfish ascendancy in Ireland.

"I am as one with you in my desire to co-operate in every way I can for the prosperity, happiness and welfare of the two citizens of Belfast. I trust that next year we may witness the birthday of a new Ireland, when Irishmen at long last will have a chance in their own land, through the agency of their own Parliament, of working together for the betterment and uplifting of the masses of the people and for the advancement and glory of the mother land.

This is not exactly the sort of spirit which Mr. F. E. Smith, M. P., expected to arouse by his flaunted taunt at the Irish people. But it is the spirit which, quiet and self-controlled, dominates every nook and perch of Ireland outside the benighted, sweated mill districts of the city of Belfast. Mr. Smith and his illustrious leader, Carson the Terrible, had better go slow with their prophecies. The Irish leaders and the Irish people are in a mood now, thanks to the fair and just spirit of the liberals of Great Britain, to settle this great question in amity and peace. If the Tory-Orange leaders like Carson and Smith and Bonar Law try with their mob methods to force the people of Ireland aside from the ways of peace, then there may be another way of settling the issue, and that way may not be the pleasant.

The Greatest Small Force in the World

I am the still small voice of the mighty press, and my utterances are heard 'round the universe. I voice the needs of humanity, and my influence is felt over seas and across nations.

I speak and where I should be heard, there I usually find answer—whether in the next street, or the next State, or on another continent. My influence ends only where newspapers are unknown.

I am the servant of a common cause—I discriminate between neither the classes nor the masses, the rich nor the poor, the weak nor the strong.

I have entrance into homes of great wealth and into the habitations of the humble. My audience is as often that of the workshop as of the private office. Democracy has no greater exponent.

I offer relief to those who suffer for lack of occupation. I provide the means by which worthy men find fitting employment. And through me, hundreds of thousands of tables are spread today which would otherwise be without food—millions of hearts are happy instead of hopeless. So have I been an instrument of salvation where mere charity might have wrought destruction.

I am an equally good friend to the employer and the employed. With my aid, the former may command the services of the competent. I work for mutual benefit always.

I am the agent of unceasing search—I recover what is lost and restore that which is found. I comb the crowds, scan the highways and byways, peer into remote corners, and almost unerringly I locate the thing or person sought.

I bear tidings of life and death, joy and despair—but mostly am I the messenger of hope and happiness, and occasionally I afford first aid to romance.

I am a worker, through whose tireless energy families find homes, buyers and sellers are brought together, unused commodities are exchanged for those which are desired.

I am a successful salesman of city and suburban real estate and the originator of the Back to the Land movement.

I am an economist who makes and saves money for those who use me. I may be employed for right or wrong. But less and less easy does it become for the unrighteous to use me to their advantage.

I am the creator of business careers for men. I bring capital to business that falters, and often thus turn defeat into success.

I am a guide to big business because I point the way to business opportunities and acquaint men with chances for advancement and profit. I am frequently found to be the promoter of world enterprises.

I reflect every human emotion, and in the great drama of daily existence I play many roles. But more often do I move my vast audience to smiles than to tears. My efficiency is beyond measurement, and though priceless in value my cost is a trifle. There is no mission too great, no task too small to put upon me.
